PHILADELPHIA, July 6—Queen Elizabeth II, beginning her today to present the bicentennial bell as a gift to the British people of the United States. BLACKS WIN ISSUE THAT TOUCHED OFF SOUTH AFRICA RIOT

Government Agrees to End Forced Use of Afrikaans as a Teaching Medium

JOHANNESBURG, July 6—The language dispute that touched off rioting in which 176 people died last month was resolved today when the Government bowed to demands for an end to the compulsory use of Afrikaans as a teaching medium in black schools. Abandoning a policy proclaimed more than 20 years ago, the minister responsible for black education, Michel C. Botha, announced the annulment of a regulation stipulating that black pupils be instructed equally in English and Afrikaans. Instead, Mr. Botha, who negotiated the dispute with black leaders, issued new regulations permitting the principals of black schools to choose either of the official languages, or a mixture of the two, for those courses not taught in the African tongues. The choice will be subject to official approval, but Mr. Botha insisted this would be a formality. 17th-Century Dutch Afrikaans is the language of the ruling party, and of the Afrikaners whose votes maintain it in power. The move to enforce their policy had powerful symbolic implications. But it also posed practical problems for Soweto children, who complained that the derivative of 17th-century Dutch, mixed with borrowings from Malay and other tongues, was too complicated for use as a teaching language. The concession, on an issue of symbolic importance to the Nationalist Party, was without precedent in the recent history of this white-ruled country. Black leaders welcomed the move, but said that it had come too late to avoid a needless loss of life. "A fight has been won," said Lennox Mlotzi, leader of the Progressive Party in Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg where a student protest march touched off the rioting. "But it was unfortunate that it was not attended to before. It could have saved many lives." "Not a Solution" Winnie Mandela, wife of Nelson Mandela, an imprisoned black nationalist leader, said that concessions on language alone would not assuage the anti-apartheid feelings of the rioters. "As long as there is Bantu education there will be unrest," she said, referring to the system of separate black schooling. "Small concessions are not a solution." Mrs. Mandela's remarks, echoed by other black leaders, raised the possibility that some students could refuse to return to classes on July 20, the day set for the reopening of the Soweto schools. The schools were closed at the outbreak of the rioting on June 16, when the protest march ended in an exchange of stone-throwing

President Vetoes Jobs Bill; Describes It as Giveaway

Charges $3.95 Billion for Public Works Would Increase Taxes and Inflation—Beame, Abzug, Gibson Assail Him

WASHINGTON, July 6—President Ford vetoed today a $3.95 billion public works jobs bill that he said epitomized the "empty promises and giveaway programs" of the Democratic majority in Congress. In a statement portending the economic theme he will strike if he wins the Republican Presidential nomination, Mr. Ford charged that the measure would not produce the 300,000 jobs predicted by its Democratic sponsors but would lead to "larger deficits, higher taxes, higher inflation and, ultimately, higher unemployment." The bill was a scaled-down version of a $6 billion program the President vetoed in February. The Senate failed by three votes to override the earlier veto. "Bad policy is bad whether the inflation price tag is $4 billion or $6 billion," Mr. Ford said in a formal veto message. Despite a plea last week from Republican mayors that he sign the modified measure, the President characterized it as a symptom of the Democrats' economic approach. "The signs are unmistakable," he said. "Four months before a national election, Congress is moving full speed ahead down the road to bigger and bigger giveaway programs." Mayor Kenneth Gibson of Newark, the new president of the United States Conference of Mayors, pointed out that Republicans from mostly smaller cities had joined their Democratic counterparts from larger cities last week in urging enactment of the public works program. "We are confident that Congress will override," Mr. Gibson said in a statement issued by the mayors conference. Mayor Beame called the veto. Continued on Page 15, Column 5

JUSTICES REDUCE POWER OF COURTS OVER CONVICTIONS

6-3 Ruling Curbs U.S. Judges in State Cases Involving Use of Illegal Evidence

WASHINGTON, July 6—In a major ruling on the final day of its year, the Supreme Court sharply reduced today the power of Federal courts to set aside state court convictions that relied on illegally obtained evidence. The ruling, by a vote of 6 to 3, substantially limits the scope of the "habeas corpus" proceedings, under which Federal courts have been able to order new trials where the first was marked by constitutional defects. The proceeding stems from the English common law, where the writ of habeas corpus was known as "the great writ." As a practical matter, the decision also limits the scope of the Fourth Amendment's protections against "unreasonable searches and seizures." Contrast With Warren The Court, moreover, issued three other rulings today involving various aspects of the Fourth Amendment, in each case taking a restrictive view of the Amendment that contrasted with earlier rulings, particularly those of the High Court in the era of Chief Justice Earl Warren. The common thread through all of the decisions was practicality—a balancing of the needs of society against the rights of the individual. Essentially, in each case the majority reasoned that the needs of society were substantial. In the habeas corpus case, for example, the Court found that the costs to society of requiring repeated judicial inquiry into the validity of a search—and of permitting convictions to be overturned—far outweighed the benefits to be gained by excluding evidence after a Federal habeas corpus review. Each ruling drew bitter dissents from at least two Justices, William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall, who have been complaining in dissents throughout the year of the Court's trimming or cutting back of protections established in earlier rulings. "Today's decision is the ninth this term marking the continuing erosion of Fourth Amendment protections against unreasonable search and seizures," Justice Brennan wrote in one of the cases, involving border patrol checkpoints. In the major ruling today involving habeas corpus, the Court ruled that Federal courts may not give habeas corpus relief to state court prisoners on the ground that illegally obtained evidence was used. Carter's Foreign Views Fit Liberal Democratic Mold

WASHINGTON, July 6—Jimmy Carter says that he expects foreign policy to be a major issue in the Presidential campaign, and he seems ready to run with a program that he decided places him in the liberal wing of the Democratic Party. His program includes making public the budget of the Central Intelligence Agency, not trying to cover up divergent viewpoints in his administration, nonintervention in the internal... Contrary to the strategic doctrine of the Ford Administration, Mr. Carter does not believe in the real possibility of limited nuclear war. He said it was his belief that once nuclear weapons were used, all-out nuclear war was likely. Again differing from the Ford Administration's practice, he said he would use economic leverage to deter potential Soviet intervention in the third world. "I would not single out food as a singular product," he added. "It would be a total withholding of trade." Whereas the Administration has made general statements about its commitment to the survival and security of Israel, Mr. Carter said he would continue economic and military aid indefinitely, although he would make "an annual judgment on the amount of aid that was absolutely necessary." He opened the door to negotiations with the developing nations on debt rescheduling and a common fund to stabilize export earnings, thus going beyond the Administration's position. In the interview Mr. Carter... Continued on Page 12, Column 1

2-Man Spacecraft Orbiting by Soviet; May Join Salyut 5

MOSCOW, July 6—The Soviet Union today launched a manned Soyuz spacecraft apparently destined for a rendezvous with a research station put into orbit two weeks ago. With two astronauts aboard, the capsule, Soyuz 21 lifted off at 3:09 P.M. Moscow time (8:09 A.M. Eastern daylight time), according to the official press agency Tass. Nearly two hours later, the launching was reported by Soviet radio and television, which said that the spacecraft had attained earth orbit and that all of its systems were functioning normally. Although no details were provided of the planned length of the mission, some Western experts believed that the Soviet astronauts would try to beat the American Skylab record of 84 days in space. The longest Soviet mission, 63 days in the Salyut 4 space station, was completed last July. Today's flight was commanded by an air force colonel, Boris Volynov, 42 years old, who in January 1969 commanded Soyuz 5, which with Soyuz 4 made the first linkup in space. Hijacking Rescue Lifts Israeli Spirit, Down Since 1973

JERUSALEM, July 6—For many Israelis, the rescue of 103 hijacking hostages and crew members from Entebbe Airport in Uganda marked Israel's emergence from a long and painful period of national mourning. Emotionally, at least, the Entebbe rescue brought to an end the self-doubt and depression that had been eating at so many Israelis since the surprise Arab attack in the war of October 1973. It was the Israeli equivalent of the Mayaguez affair, minus the heavy casualties. And it has lifted Israeli spirits just as that incident helped America's self-confidence after the fall of South Vietnam. This renewed sense of national pride was reflected in the quietly moving funeral ceremony this afternoon for Lieut. Col. Yehonatan Netanyahu, the 30-year-old American-born officer who was killed during the operation. The President, the Prime Minister and most members of the Cabinet were there along with several thousand mourners. Although they were gripped by the loss of a promising young officer, the mourners expressed a shared conviction that he had died for a purpose. In a sense, it took the eu... HOSPITALS GIRDING FOR STRIKE TODAY

A Cost-of-Living Wage Rise is Principal Issue in Dispute at 34 Voluntary Centers... By DAVID BIRD... Hospital, union and government officials prepared last night for a strike at 6 A.M. today as negotiations remained at a standstill between most of the city's voluntary hospitals and 40,000 members of District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees. A mediator, Paul Yager, regional director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, declared last night that he saw "no immediate solution" in the dispute, in which a key issue is a cost-of-living increase. Spokesmen for both the hospitals and the union were equally pessimistic. Hospitals said they had stockpiled supplies and would have enough employees to take care of emergency cases. Even some elective surgery was expected to be accommodated without much trouble, many hospitals reported. The strike would affect 34 hospitals with 21,119 beds. All but one of the hospitals—Southside Hospital in Bay Shore, L.I.—are in New York City. Previous two-year contracts be... Continued on Page 40, Column 5

Chu Teh, Chinese Army's Chief Who Led Reds to Victory, Dies

HONG KONG, July 6—Chu Teh, one of China's greatest military leaders and the chairman of the National People's Congress, died today in Peking. He was 90 years old. A brief announcement by the Peking radio described his death as a "great loss to the party, army and people." No details as to the cause of death were given. Mr. Chu commanded the Chinese Red Army in the Long March, the resistance against the Japanese occupation of North China and the final defeat of the Nationalist armies. As chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, the nominal legislature, Mr. Chu was China's head of state on ceremonial occasions, and only last month he had assumed the task of meeting foreign visitors after an official spokesman disclosed that Mao Tse-tung, the party chairman, was so advanced in age that he would no longer see foreign leaders. Western analysts in Hong Kong believe this job may now fall on Wu Teh, the Mayor of Peking and a deputy chairman of the National People's Con... Continued on Page 9, Column 6

City U. in Turmoil Over Faculty Cuts

By PETER KHSS... The colleges of the City University were in a state of administrative turmoil yesterday as officials met to map faculty layoffs—more than a fifth of some staffs—and discussed other ways to cope with budget slashes under a new formula of allocating funds to the various institutions. City College said it would probably have to lay off 200 from its instructional ranks under the 9 percent cut in spending ordered for this year by the City University's chancellor, Dr. Robert J. Kibbee. Brooklyn College, resisting a 14.2 percent slash that its officials consider disproportionate, talked of losing up to 350 faculty members. Hunter and Baruch Colleges... Spanish Red Likens Revolt Against Soviet to Luther's

By FLORA LEWIS

EAST BERLIN, July 2—The protest I would have been leader of the Spanish Communist Party, who was the most openly critical at the European Communist conference here, says he considers the new movement of Western European Communists against Moscow's dominance comparable to Martin Luther's rejection of Rome.

After the two-day conference ended, the Spaniard, Santiago Carrillo, relaxed in a little reception room and, in an interview, gave his thoughts on longer-term trends. In his speech to 28 other Communist party heads from East and West he had likened Communism to the primitive Christian church and the October revolution in Russia in 1917 to "our Christmas."

It was a startling use of metaphor long advanced by non-Communists to explain the mystical aspects of Moscow's creed and its doctrine of ideological infallibility—a metaphor that has never been heard at a meeting of Communist leaders, where the litany requires tribute to scientific historical materialism.

"Yes," said the aging Spaniard, who was a militant bomb-thrower in his youth but who is proud of having mellowed. "We had our pope, our Vatican, and we thought we were predestined to triumph. But as we mature and become less of a church, we must become more rational, closer to reality."

"Individual Sense of Things" "We must see that each individual has his private life, his individual sense of things. I told the last party executive meeting that a person's preferences of friends, of music and literature, whether to be religious or to do nothing at all, to do with the party. The party can only be concerned with problems of politics and social struggle."

It is a drastic break with the old Communist claim to total faith, total allegiance, a total answer to all life's problems. "And why not make a comparison with Luther?" Mr. Carrillo asked. "Nowadays he would be burned at the stake. Heretics usually turn out to be all right. They are ahead of their time, but after all they are right. We want Communists to be heretics. When we become conservatives, we are no longer right."

Among Mr. Carrillo's heresies, in the customary Moscow view, are not only the right to independence of national parties but also an insistence on the need for what other Communists call "bourgeois democracy" and "bourgeois freedoms."

"I couldn't have said these things at a Communist meeting two years ago," he said. "There would have been an uproar of Spain Is Promised More Rapid Change By Prime Minister"

By HENRY GINGER MADRID, July 6—Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez González, battling against general hostility and suspicion after his appointment Saturday, promised tonight to speed political change in a conciliatory appeal for support.

Mr. Suárez made his first public address on television after a day of trying to put together a government as widely based as possible. Almost as soon as his surprise appointment was announced, Mr. Suárez was deserted by most of the reformists in the outgoing government and spurned by the opposition on the ground that he represented a coalition of financial, political and religious interests opposed to change.

Mr. Suárez declared tonight that the country's preoccupations were also his. Among them, he stressed unemployment, inflation, lack of schools and democratic change. "If political reform has been initiated as an urgent task," he said, "we are going to accelerate it with the realism that our times require."

The 43-year-old head of government, one of the youngest that Spain has ever had, stressed his age by saying that he belonged to "a generation of Spaniards that has lived only in peace."

"I belong by conviction and disposition," he said, "to a majority of citizens that wishes to speak a modern language, one of concord and of coconciliation." The Prime Minister, who is believed to be offering posts to political figures of his generation, said that he welcomed criticism, was ready to listen "to all voices," and respected and was ready to collaborate with his adversaries. He said that the final goal was a system by which "government of the future will be the result of the free will of the majority of the Spanish," and for this, he added, ask for the collaboration of all social forces.

Sudanese Break Libyan T Charge Role in Coup Att

By ERIC PACE

CAIRO, July 6—President Gaafar al-Nimeiry of the Sudan, quelled, was charged yesterday by the Government in an unsuccessful coup against him, broke diplomatic relations with Libya today and took other steps to curtail Libyan influence.

The measures were disclosed by the Sudanese Government press agency, whose reports are relayed to Cairo. Early editions of tomorrow's Cairo papers reported that Egyptian police had arrested an unspecified number of Libyan citizens in connection with three explosions in a northern Egyptian town, Mersa Matruh.

In Egypt and elsewhere in the Arab world, efforts toward inter-Arab unity were being made. That emphasis on unity was largely a response to widespread anguish and anger over the continuing bloodshed in Lebanon as well as the alleged meddling of Libya in Sudanese affairs.

The Cairo press, which renews the Government's views, is notified the Libyan leader, Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi, as an insurrectionist, and voiced continuing Egyptian support for the Sudanese Government. Well-placed Sudanese sources here insisted that Sudan for the Arab League peace force in Lebanon skirmished yesterday, although the force's Egyptian commander asserted in an interview that no clash had taken place.

An involvement in the Sudan were expected to believe that Communists had really changed that much and why they continued to call themselves Communists. Mr. Carrillo answered without hesitation, "It's just a name."

"I know it's unpopular in America," he said. "It creates obstacles to seek reforms within that name. But in Spain, in Italy, in France, it is a popular name. Why should we renounce it and leave it to the extremists? There is a more responsible fringe group, sides that would be a setback in our countries to give it up."

African Nations Bid U.N. Council Meet on Israeli Raid

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 6—African members of the United Nations asked today for an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the "wanton act of aggression" carried out by Israel in its raid to free hostages at Entebbe Airport in Uganda last weekend. The Africans acted after having held a strategy meeting at which it was suggested that the Council wait until Foreign Minister Juma Oris of Uganda could fly here to present the case. A Council session is expected Thursday.

in the Israeli raid on Entebbe Airport this week, and he again vowed retribution against Israel. According to the Uganda radio, he also said that his country did not have bombers to attack Kenya for having allowed the Israeli planes to land on their way back home from Entebbe. But he warned, according to the broadcast, that there were enemies of Kenya that did have long-range bombers and could carry out such an attack. The only country in the area that is thought to have such planes is Libya, which is Uganda's closest African ally. Mr. Amin reportedly met this morning with a Libyan official. The Uganda radio also quoted a spokesman of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine as having said that five-of its people were arrested in Kenya in January while on a mission to blow up an El Al plane. Since early this year President Amin has said that five Palestinians were in Kenyan prisons. The five were among 53 terrorists whose freedom was being demanded by the hijackers in exchange for the hostages. Kenya has denied holding any Palestinians. A marked deterioration in Kenyan-Uganda relations dates from early this year when the Uganda President, perhaps irked by attacks on his policies in the Kenyan press, issued a series of pronouncements attacking Kenya. Uganda, Kenya and Tanzania are partners in a customs union called the East African Community. Uganda contends that Kenya is not sharing equitably in the proceeds of duties and profits of the community. Uganda, the only one of the three members that is landlocked, has insisted that access to harbors in Kenya and Tanzania is a right. Kenya has regarded that access as a privilege. Furthermore, when the World Bank blocked credits to Uganda last spring, Mr. Amin looked to Kenya and Tanzania to pay out Uganda's outstanding commitments to the bank. Apparently thwarted, Mr. Amin turned to his Libyan allies for help.

Libyan Hijacks Plane, Surrenders

PALMA, Majorca, July 6 (UPI)—A 20-year-old Libyan brandishing what turned out to be two toy pistols hijacked a Libyan airliner on a domestic flight today but surrendered to the police after landing on this Mediterranean island of Spain. No one was hurt aboard the plane, a Libyan Arab Airlines Boeing 727, which had 86 passengers and a crew of 12. The plane returned to Libya.

The New York Times/July 7, 1976

The Spanish news agency Cifra said the Libyan, Mustafa Hadlumagid, had entered the cockpit of the plane five minutes after it had taken off from Tripoli, Libya, on a flight to Benghazi. Brandishing his "weapons," he demanded to be flown to Tunis but the airport there refused landing permission.

The pilot subsequently received permission to land at Palma. Before arriving here, the crew reportedly persuaded the hijacker to surrender. Cifra said most of the passengers were unaware of what was going on during the flight.

French Identify Hijackers

PARIS, July 6—The French counterespionage service today identified four of seven persons involved in the hijacking. Sources close to the service, known as the Defense and Security of the Territory, said the agency had identified the leader of the hijackers as Wilfrid Bose, a 27-year-old West German who also used the alias Claudius Axel. A similar identification was made by Israeli officials yesterday.

The three others were identified as follows: Jail el-Arja, about 39 years old, in charge of South American guerrilla activities for the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine; Faiz Jaber, about 44 years old, member of the front's military branch in charge of guerrilla operations; Abd al-Latif Abd al-Razaq, 43 years old, an Iraqi citizen said to have been a confidant of Wadi Haddad, the head of the Popular Front's operational branch. The French agency was said to be seeking to identify further the two members of the group who called themselves Abu Ali and Abu Khalid, and a German woman who used the Arab pseudonym Halima.

Traveler to Beirut Finds Troops Well Dug In

By HENRY TANNER Special to The New York Times

Beirut, July 6—A young man checked a second set of papers issued weeks ago some evidence by Palestinian authorities and ops are prepared for a long stay, the head of the Lebanese leftist-Muslim alliance. In one deserted village the only human figure in sight was a crippled boy running jerkily along the road. The next village, Bhamdoun, seemed full of affluent summer residents who had escaped the filth and heat of Beirut. They wore holiday clothes and their children played on the road.

The New York Times/July 7, 1976

The Palestinian and Lebanese leftist military presence from here to Beirut was virtually invisible. Syria's military presence between the border and Sofar lent powerful emphasis to the publicly made Syrian pledge that Syrian forces would not withdraw from Lebanon until a settlement had been reached. The pledge was made by Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam at the Arab League in Cairo last week in answer to demands for immediate withdrawal by Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader. A real settlement, as distinct from another temporary ceasefire, is not likely for many months, if then. The Syrian policy thus means that Syrian troops will be here indefinitely, Arab and Western diplomats say.

convinced that the leftist offensive was halted. As for Mr. Arafat, he was warned by Mr. Assad that the Palestinians had to choose between Syria and Mr. Jumblat, the Syrian officials said. Mr. Arafat refused to give up his alliance with the Lebanese left, despite this Syrian pressure and merely consented, grudgingly, to withdraw Palestinian front-line support for the leftist offensive then under way. Two weeks later, the Syrians sent their first army units openly into Lebanon. They had lost their earlier confidence that they could control the Palestinians or the Lebanese left from afar. The struggle has been growing more violent and bitter since then.

Christians in Northern Lebanon Report Repulse of Leftist Attack

BEIRUT, Lebanon, July 6 (AP)—Fierce fighting was reported in northern Lebanon today, with Lebanese Christians asserting that they had beaten back an assault by Lebanese leftists and their Palestinian allies into Christian-held areas. Figures compiled from hospitals and security sources indicated that more than 200 people were killed in the last 24 hours. Palestinians charged that troops of Syria's expeditionary force in Lebanon were helping the Christians in a counterattack.

Guerrillas and Lebanese leftists advanced southward into the Christian heartland between Tripoli and Beirut yesterday and assaulted the Christian town of Chekka, 40 miles from here. The joint Palestinian-leftist command said the attack, a counterblow for the continuing Christian attacks on the Tell Zaatar Palestinian camp in southeastern Beirut, had succeeded in overrunning Chekka and five other small villages in the area, including Hamat and Salata. A spokesman for right-wing Christian forces said today that Hamat and Salata had been retaken by the Christian counter-attack. Christian forces also rephoria produced by the Entebbe rescue to remind Israelis just how long it had been since they had something to celebrate.

Hijacking Rescue Lifts Spirits Of Israelis After 1973 Setback

The armed forces salvaged the situation on the battlefield during the 1973 war, but everything else seems to have eroded since then.

Problems and Setbacks

Israel's political isolation has deepened, the economic squeeze has worsened, the diplomatic defeats in the United Nations and elsewhere have come with depressing regularity.

Hardly a day goes by without an article in the papers about an Israeli sports team's being banned from some international meet or an Israeli delegation's coming under the concerted attack of Arabs and others at some international conference. Individually, the events are not important but cumulatively they have a depressing effect on the national psyche.

Israel's domestic situation has also soured since 1973. The government often seems weak and vacillating. The political leaders are frequently at each other's throats. The occupied West Bank of the Jordan has been a hotbed of riots and the unions have been striking over petty issues.

The public response to the rescue has been spontaneous and extraordinary. Flags and bunting have been draped outside homes and buildings since Sunday. People have been answering the phone with "mazel tov"—"congratulations"—and an impressive 20 million pounds (nearly $3 million) in unsolicited contributions has flowed into the Soldiers' Welfare Committee and a newly formed Voluntary Fund for Israel's Security.

The money from the latter is to be turned over to the Defense Ministry to make up for a budget cut it suffered recently as a result of a clampdown on government spending.

New Tax Stirred Rancor

The idea of hard-pressed Israelis contributing voluntarily to a fund destined for the Government would have been laughable before Entebbe. Far from being in a gift-giving mood, the Israelis were bitter over a new 8 percent value-added tax that went into effect last week.

"Entebbe," an Israeli businessman said with a grin today, "was the one thing that could make people stop complaining about the V.A.T."

Israelis readily acknowledge that serious problems lie ahead. Some sort of retaliatory action from the Palestinians is likely and the security forces were retrained on special alert against such an eventuality.

There will also be diplomatic repercussions. The rescue operation has already been condemned by the Organization of African Unity and a hostile debate at the United Nations is likely.

But all of this part of the ordinary daily fare for Israelis. What is different after Entebbe is the mood. Haaretz, the leading independent paper, summed it up in its lead editorial today: "Since 1973, the Israeli public has not been pampered by many successes. This operation has given it a chance to hold its head high once again."

SUIT IS WELCOMED BY SOVIET WEEKLY

MOSCOW, July 6 (Reuters)—The editors of a Soviet weekly newspaper said today that they were "quite happy" that an American correspondent here had filed a libel suit over its allegation that he worked for the Central Intelligence Agency.

For the third time in six weeks, the weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta attacked the journalist, Alfred Friendly Jr. of Newsweek magazine, and two of his colleagues, Christopher S. Wren of The New York Times and George Krinsky of The Associated Press.

The latest article, made available in advance of publication tomorrow, referred directly to Mr. Friendly's action.

"We are quite happy with this abrupt step because the editorial board has material about the work of the Newsweek correspondent which, we are certain, will provide a basis

Lisbon Court Confirms Election of President

LISBON, July 6 (Reuters)—The Supreme Court confirmed Gen. António Ramalho Eanes as president today, opening the way for his inauguration July 14.

General Ramalho Eanes, backed by the three main non-Communist parties, won the presidential election last month. He will be sworn in before the Parliament elected last April.

The general has said he would have the Socialist Party form a minority government on the basis of the 107 seats it holds in the 263-member Assembly of the Republic.

not only for the public condemnation of that gentleman, but also for the criminal punishment envisaged by Soviet law," it said.

Canada Signs Pact to Establish Links With the Common Market

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times

OTTAWA, July 6 — Canada and the Common Market signed an agreement today that is expected here to bring this country closer to the European Community and lessen the dominance of the United States in Canada's foreign relationships.

Called the "Framework Agreement for Commercial and Economic Cooperation Between Canada and the European Community," the pact follows nearly four years of efforts by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Government to establish a "contractual relationship" between Canada and the nine-nation market.

The agreement, aimed at expanding trade and other exchanges between Canada and the Europeans, provides for establishment of a Joint Cooperation Committee to promote faster, closer contacts between Common Market organs and Canadian enterprises.

Apart from setting up a committee, the document signed today did little to explain how the arrangement would work. Canadian officials have hailed the possibilities opened up by the pact. But a spokesman for the Canadian Manufacturers Association called the whole idea "a bland bucket of fog," unlikely to go much beyond friendly talk.

Mr. Trudeau began approaches to the Common Market in 1972 as part of his program to advance the so-called "third option" in Canadian foreign policy, calling for diversification of contact abroad instead of reliance on the American link.

One practical effect of the agreement, it was noted, will be the mutual conferring of most-favored nation status among the countries involved, and establishment of a formal framework for consultations that has not existed before. The pact will take effect upon ratification by the European governments involved.

3 Cubans Given Sanctuary After 58-Hour Boat Escape

MIAMI, July 6 (UPI)—Immigration officials have granted sanctuary to three Cuban men who rowed an eight-foot dinghy for 58 hours across the shark-infested Florida straits because, they said, they feared they would be sent to fight in Africa.

The three were taken to a Miami hotel Sunday after they were found by a pleasure boat off Islamorada in the Florida keys. They identified themselves as Maximo Ojeda, 22 years old, Pedro Luis Pena, 33, and Heriberto Mora, 24.

The same day the three men left Cuba, two teen-agers and a 12-year-old boy were rescued by an oil tanker 240 miles northwest of Key West.

The eldest of the three Alberto Martinez Pina, 19, said he, too, feared being sent as a soldier to fight in Africa. The two others were identified as Jorge Rodriguez Estevez, 19, and Santiago Rodriguez, 12.

Italian Red in Parliament Post

Pietro Ingrao

By CHRISTINA LORD
Special to The New York Times

ROME, July 6—After Pietro Ingrao gave his first speech as President of the Italian Chamber of Deputies last night, a Christian Democratic deputy commented: "There was a lot of Ingrao in it—the regions that must participate in the government of the nation. They really are the burning issues in Parliament."

Other colleagues familiar with Mr. Ingrao, who is 61 years old, recognized that the speech touched on some of the broad issues of Italian life that are closest to him. The first Communist to be elected to so high a parliamentary post is a specialist in parliamentary and constitutional affairs and has made something of a name for himself as a dedicated student of institutions.

It seems an unlikely set of interests for someone who, as a young man, worked on the screenplay for one of Luciano Visconti's first films, "Ossessione" (1941). Mr. Ingrao and the director met while Mr. Ingrao was a student at the University of Rome and involved in the Experimental Center for Cinema.

In 1943 it was Mr. Visconti who warned Mr. Ingrao, already active in the then-illegal Communist Party, of his imminent arrest by the Fascist regime and helped him flee. The two later remained fast friends, and the director, also a Communist, was a frequent supper guest at the Ingrao home until his death in the spring.

Again in the Underground
Pietro Ingrao was born in Lenola, a small town in Latina Province, south of Rome, on March 30, 1915. Active in the anti-Fascist student movement in Rome, he joined the Communist Party in 1940 and soon had to take refuge in the rugged mountains of Calabria in Southern Italy to avoid arrest by the Fascist police.

After the fall of Fascism in the spring of 1943 he worked in Milan for the clandestine Communist newspaper L'Unità for several months. The occupation of Northern Italy by the Germans after Italy's armistice with the Allies in September 1943 forced him underground again. He took part in the resistance and in clandestine party activity until after the war, when he could return to journalism.

In 1947 Mr. Ingrao, having earned respect as one of the party's most promising intellectuals, was named editor of L'Unità, a job he held for 10 years.

During this period he became increasingly involved in party activities. Elected to Parliament in 1948, he has been re-elected to all of the numerous Parliaments since.

A disciple of Palmiro Togliatti, one of the party's founders and its leader until his death, Mr. Ingrao was named to the party secretariat in 1956 and made responsible for the press and propaganda department. He is also on the 34-member Executive Committee.

In his political line Mr. Ingrao has emphasized the importance of mass participation, rather than negotiation among top political leaders, as the means to bring about socialism. His concern with social institutions has led him to take a special interest in local government and Parliament as instruments of social change.

In the Party Minority
The 11th party congress in 1966—the first after the death of Mr. Togliatti—brought with it a period of open disagreement between Mr. Ingrao and the majority of the party leaders. The specific issue was the new center-left Government; the official Communist position indicated openness to the arrangement, while Mr. Ingrao was opposed.

Against the advice of Luigi Longo, then secretary of the party, Mr. Ingrao stunned party faithful at the congress by announcing: "Dear comrades, I would not be sincere if I did not say that you have not convinced me." Despite this his position in the party did not appear to suffer, and he was elected to head the Communist group in the Chamber of Deputies in 1968.

He was instrumental in the creation of Italy's regions, which became functioning administrative entities with the elections of 1970. Last year he was named to head the party's Center of Studies for State Reform, one of whose tasks is to examine an overhauling of the concordat between the Vatican and the Italian State.

Mr. Ingrao is married to Laura Lombardo Radice, and they have five children. In addition to his interest in cinema, he enjoys listening to music and playing tennis.

United Press International
He won respect early as a party intellectual.

Paris and Bonn Decide on Consulting With London

Special to The New York Times
HAMBURG, West Germany, July 6—The French and West German heads of government today endorsed a new relationship including Britain that came close to establishing the informal "directorates" of the Common Market's big three that President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing had once proposed.

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt went out of his way to welcome Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's recent agreement for annual French-British meetings, and pointed out that he too had close contacts with the London Government. Prime Minister James Callaghan of Britain visited Bonn last month.

Since the "directorates" suggestion ran into strong opposition from the smaller members of the Common Market, who were also angered at their initial exclusion from the Atlantic conference in Puerto Rico in June, the word was carefully avoided.

Instead, it was decided that two-way sessions of the kind that have become routine between France and West Germany would also be held with Britain, providing a regular three-sided working system but maintaining the appearance of separate links.

Family Dinner Served
After a 24-hour visit in Mr. Schmidt's home town, which included a family dinner last night cooked by Hannelore Schmitt, President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Schmidt appeared briefly in the stolidly ornate reception room of Hamburg's City Hall. Both sides of the Rhine, demonstrating with a mood of retraction how quickly such flashpoints had calmed nowadays.

Relations between France and West Germany have reached a point that they will appear in a prime place in the West German government's foreign policy. The Chancellor said, in the same room 14 years ago, during his triumphal tour in the aftermath of the signing of the treaty that provides for the semiannual meetings of the heads of government and usually their cabinets.

The session today showed that way and asked television to give a short version of his views.

Blacks in South Africa: Turmoil Turns Moderates Into Radicals

By F. BURNS
The New York Times

SBURGH, July 6 — A delegation of Soweto townships here last week... a black power salute... principal morning newspaper... photograph of the incident at the top of its front page... artheid, was registered... what many regard as the... outing the radical... moderate black opinion...

ment to apartheid was starkly apparent in his talks in Bavaria with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger last month. If there was any suspicion that he might arrive at the talks a chastened man, he was at pains to dismiss it, declaring publicly that his Government was not prepared to compromise on the essentials of separate development at a time when the policy was on the verge of reaching "fruition."

Such generalities leave wide room for maneuver. However, the Government has done nothing to discourage the assumption that it contemplates no major reforms to ease domestic frustrations and relieve pressures from abroad. The riots do not seem to have disturbed the conviction that the progress of the homelands toward nationhood—as manifested by the planned independence of the Transkei later this year—will demonstrate that blacks' aspirations can be accommodated within the framework of apartheid. That interpretation, shared by many Afrikaners with close ties to the Government, assumes that any concession on the status of urban blacks, at least in the short term, will be minor.

Unless there is a change of heart on one side or the other, the prospect is not for reconciliation but for alienation. For the blacks the danger is that the Government, having demonstrated that it is not afraid to use harsh measures to suppress unrest, will not hesitate to do so again. For the Government the risk is that the mood among blacks, already militant, will become more so if their grievances go unrelieved. For both, as for all those who fear a racial war, the hope must be that the concession on the language issue, minor though it is, will prove after all to be only the first step in a long and difficult journey toward full reconciliation.

and police gunfire. The marchers, who had mounted a sporadic school boycott for more than five weeks before the march, carried banners describing Afrikaans as "the language of the oppressor," suggesting that their real target was apartheid itself. Later, rioters attacked every symbol of authority, including offices, clinics and schools. So far, the Government has shown no sign of conceding to other demands placed before it by the Soweto representatives who negotiated with Mr. Botha.

In addition to the abrogation of the Afrikaans requirement, the black leaders called for a gradual widening of political and economic opportunities that would amount to a retreat from the most basic principles apartheid. The concession on the language issue abrogated a policy dating from 1955, when the Government first decided that English and Afrikaans should be used equally to courses for black students after the first four grades, which are taught exclusively in African toogues. The policy caused little trouble until recently, when the authorities in the Johannesburg area, after years of flexible enforcement, began insisting on more literal application.

Proxmire to Run Again
MILWAUKEE, July 6 (UPI)—Senator William Proxmire, a Democrat, one of the top vote-getters in Wisconsin political history, said today he would run for re-election. Mr. Proxmire, who is 60 years old, won his Senate seat in a special election in 1957 and was re-elected in 1958, 1964 and 1970.

Queen Gets Rousing Welcome as Visit Begins in Philadelphia

By LINDA CHARLTON
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, July 6 — Queen Elizabeth II, the great-great-granddaughter of George III, stepped ashore here today to start a brief East Coast tour celebrating 200 years of independence for this former British colony.

The Queen embarked immediately on a round of ceremonial appearances ranging from the most routine to the historically piquant, and even occasionally the spontaneous. She accepted bouquets, met local officials and Girl Scouts; she also visited the Liberty Bell and Independence Hall, where the Declaration of Independence from Britain was adopted and signed in 1776.

The Queen herself took note of the significance of her visit, saying that it was "particularly personal interest that I viewed those events which took place 200 years ago."

"It seems to me," she said, "that Independence Day, the Fourth of July, should be celebrated as much in Britain as in America. Not in rejoicing in the separation of the American colonies from the British crown but in sincere gratitude to the Founding Fathers of the great Republic for having taught Britain a very valuable lesson."

Enthusiastic Welcome
Philadelphia, still recovering under today's shimmering sun from Sunday's festivities, welcomed the 50-year-old Queen with an enthusiasm that seemed to demonstrate either that British royalty still has a fairy-tale glamor despite its solid virtue—or that everyone loves a good loser.

A crowd estimated at up to 5,000 gathered this morning before the 412-foot royal yacht

New York to Be Host To Queen on Friday

Queen Elizabeth II of Britain, who arrived in Philadelphia yesterday, will visit New York Friday. She will be proclaimed an honorary citizen of the city by Mayor Beame, be honored at a luncheon in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, tour the Morris-Jumel Mansion in upper Manhattan and inspect another local landmark, Bloomingdale's.

Following a dinner and reception aboard the royal yacht Britannia Friday night, the Queen and Prince Philip will sail for New Haven. The royal itinerary also includes a White House ceremony in Washington today and appearances in the capital tomorrow.

Over the weekend, the royal visitors plan to visit Charlottesville, Va., Providence and Newport, R. I., and Boston. They are scheduled to sail for Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Sunday evening.

Britannia, its black hull gleaming like patent leather and its royal standard waving from its mainmast, docked at Penn's Landing, where William Penn, an English emigrant, landed in 1681. The red carpet was unrolled; the Marine Corps honor guard closed up—and a noisy yellow crane rumbled up to lift Britannia's gangway into place.

Vendors, almost certainly the same ones who were hawked American flags on Sunday, were doing a moderately brisk business in Union Jacks today. High school bands replaced "Yanks Doodle" with "Rule Britannia" and "Hearts of Oak." One pushcart entrepreneur was selling buttons with the Queen's picture alone for $1; buttons combining the Queen's picture with a red, white and blue ribbon and a miniature Liberty Bell went for $2.50.

The Queen's dress, described officially as being horizontally striped, was actually white with wavy vertical stripes of navy blue, with a matching coat and a white straw hat.

Prince Phillip, the only member of the royal family to accompany her, wore a gray suit. Ronald Allison, the Queen's press secretary, was in pin-stripes, and wore a hands-on-the-sea tie ornamented with American flags and the date "1776."

Visit to the Bell
The Queen's schedule took her to City Hall, on a visit to the Liberty Bell, then to the Penn Mutual Building for a panoramic view of the city and back to Britannia for a luncheon party where eggs with lobster, lamb cutlets in aspic and apple caramel were served to 54 persons.

The afternoon's principal event was the official presentation of the Bicentennial Bell, a gift from the British people, cast in the Whitechapel Foundry in London where the original Liberty Bell was cast in 1752. The six-and-one-half-ton bell has hung in its bell tower at the visitors center of Independence National Park since June 15. Today, after her speech, her majesty pushed her button as a signal for the bell to be rung the first time.

The bell, described in one press release as having a note of B above middle C, and in another as being B below middle C, an octave's difference is inscribed with these words: "For the people of the United States from the people of Britain 4 July 1976. Let Freedom Ring." The lack of a regal waving and smiling. She shook hands with Mrs. Maureen O'Brien of Delaware County, Pa., who was waving a Union Jack. Mrs. O'Brien, still excited, said that when she told the Queen she came originally from just outside London, her majesty smiled and said, "You're far away from home."

Other protesters later in the day, quiet and orderly, were calling for "England out of Ireland."

From the bell ceremony, the Queen walked to Carpenters Hall, through the crowd estimated by the National Park Service at 75,000 people, stopping to talk to people in the museum, enthusiastic and offering flag-waving crowd as she went. In the half hour before her arrival there two rangers had polished the glass front door until it glittered and practiced their task of opening the door for the royal party.

"I'm thrilled," said Halaine Myzrel, a student at Temple University, as she smoothed her gloves. "I'll be able to tell my grandchildren I opened the door for the Queen."

As the Queen walked in, toward a large statue of George Washington, a reporter asked her if her red, white and pink nosegay was rosebuds. The Queen hesitated, looked down and said, "I should think so."

Then it was on again, working the crowds, to Independence Hall. The Queen, asked her reaction to the building where the revolution was legalized, said it was "rather fascinating." The Prince, asked the same question, smiled and said, "Does it really matter?"

On her way to her car to return to Britannia, the Queen again walked over to the crowd, waving and smiling. She shook hands with Mrs. Maureen O'Brien of Delaware County, Pa., who was waving a Union Jack. Mrs. O'Brien, still excited, said that when she told the Queen she came originally from just outside London, her majesty smiled and said, "You're far away from home."

The Queen's evening schedule included a dinner for 400 people and a reception for 600 given by the City of Philadelphia at the Museum of Art.

Excerpts From the Interview With Carter on His Concepts in Foreign Policy

WASHINGTON, July 6—Following are excerpts from the transcript of an interview with Jimmy Carter on June 24, conducted in Washington and aboard a plane on a flight from Washington to Americus, Ga.

QUESTION: You've made openness a very important theme in your campaign presentations. You want the sunshine laws to apply to the Federal Government. To what extent would they apply to foreign policy as well?

ANSWER: I recognize that in the formative stages of foreign policy deliberations you have to have freedom of interrelationships between staff members and executive officers that would be enhanced by the absence of disclosure; but I would like to require that any final decisions made by the Congress and the President be included in the sunshine law. Matters that relate directly to national security if disclosed ought to be excluded, unless it is obvious that our potential adversaries already have the same information.

There might be times when foreign leaders would demand privacy. I would certainly honor that if I could not change their position.

Q: The Pentagon, when it develops the budget each year, looks at a number of alternatives, and when it recommends particular weapons systems it looks at alternative weapons systems. But these alternatives are not shared with Congress in the budget presentation. Would you as President see to it that the alternatives that the Pentagon looks at internally in making these decisions are made available to Congress as well?

A: I think that if I tried to require that all alternatives be presented to the Congress and the public, it would be a very confusing thing and would serve no purpose. But if there was a difference of opinion between the Secretary of Defense or the Joint Chiefs of Staff about the level of funding, I would have no objection to those officials presenting the alternatives to the Congress.

His Own Budget Ideas
Q: Well, alternatives on whether to buy one kind of aircraft or another?

A: Yes; I would have no objection to that in a department. I might say this: That I would make my own recommendation in the budget proposal to Congress and would certainly reserve the right to aggressively pursue my own position.

Q: A few months back, President Ford vetoed a foreign aid bill, largely on the grounds that it contained a number of legislative veto provisions; that is, Congress could, by majority vote, negate an action of the President rather than the traditional way of Congress needing two-thirds to override the President. How do you feel about the use of the legislative veto by Congress as a foreign policy tool?

A: I would expect that during my term as President, if I am elected, that I would make every reasonable attempt to preserve the prerogatives and the authority of the President.

Q: Right now on the books there is a law that gives Congress a legislative veto in arms sales in excess of $25 million. Would you favor a repeal of that amendment?

A: I doubt it. I think that my own inclination on the limitation of arms sales would be compatible with that posture. And I would hope to build relationships with Congress very quickly, perhaps even before I am inaugurated, that would make such an amendment unnecessary.

I think that to the extent there is a mutual trust between the President and Congress, constant consultation on decisions of that kind and openness in their dealings with one another, that those legal limitations on one another would not be necessary.

As a general principle, I can't say unequivocally now that throughout a four-year and eight-year period I would never permit any joint sharing of veto powers with Congress on any matter of legislation. I might be required to compromise on something that is very important to me to acquire that end—to yield on that point in order to acquire an end that I desire.

Careful Monitoring Favored

But my general attitude would be to preserve the independence and prerogatives of the President and let the Congress be responsible for preserving their independence and prerogatives.

Q: Would this apply to provisions that would allow Congress to give prior approval on, say, covert C.I.A. operations?

A: Well, here again, I think the operation of the C.I.A. is one that ought to be carefully monitored by both the President and Congress.

I have no objection to a joint committee of the Congress sharing the oversight responsibilities with me. That would be my preference. And I think that is a legitimate function for the Congress to perform.

But I would keep an open mind about it. But in general, it would have to be a very good argument before I would yield to the Congress unlimited privileges that the President now enjoys.

Jimmy Carter: a foreign policy discussion

Q: Do you intend to be primarily your own Secretary of State?

A: Not as far as the administration of our foreign policy is concerned. But I would want to have a Secretary of State and heads of other departments who are capable of performing their functions independently, reporting to me and keeping me conversant with what their overall policies might be.

Q: When President Nixon came into office, he brought Henry Kissinger along with him to the White House and the notion was to strengthen the National Security Council adviser with respect to the Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense, to make the White House the focal point. Would you want to have your focal point in the National Security Council staff, or would the lead agency be the State Department?

A: As far as the evolution of foreign affairs and policies are concerned, I would not want to have a White House staff in effect superior to the Secretary of State. Now I believe in putting into office the most competent and qualified people as administrators of that department and letting them perform their functions without interference from me, but responsibly always to me. I really prefer to be the spokesman for the nation in the area of foreign affairs and on matters of major policy and let the American people look to me as the one to represent our country in that respect.

Q: How do you feel about your Presidential appointments expressing their own views about foreign policy if they differed from your own, say in testimony before Congress?

A: Well now, I certainly would be willing to accept some differences of a viewpoint. If the difference was so great that it would cause us disharmony or consternation or lack of purpose within the department itself, that would be damaging to the nation's strength. And I would not permit that.

But I hope that my normal, careful, methodical, scientific or planning approach to longer-range policies involved would serve to remove those disharmonies long before they reach the stage of actual implementation. And this is the way I have been able to perform as Governor and I think it would be an unlikely prospect that at the time of implementation or presentation of a budget to the Congress or in state of crisis because a mistake had been made, that myself and the major Cabinet members would have that much of a disagreement.

My own method of conducting the affairs of state, of the state of Georgia, as Governor, has been to have as broad a range of opinions as possible presented to me, let me assimilate the information that I don't have through my own experience, and then make a judgment for my own posture as I thought it was best. And I would like to keep this procedure as a normal method for conducting the affairs of the White House.

I don't like to get tied down or dependent upon a particular point of view from a single individual.

Q: Do you know if foreign policy is going to be an issue in the campaign, whether it is Governor Reagan or President Ford?

A: Yes, either one. Q: Why do you think so? And will it be a major issue in the campaign?

A: I don't know. I think it will be a major issue that I think is inevitable that this be the case. When a campaign is run against an incumbent President, for instance, on foreign affairs and the conduct of foreign affairs, it is obviously a matter that is of intense interest to our nation.

Using Foreign Policy
Q: Do you think President Ford would use the powers of his office to do things in foreign policy for his own political advantage?

A: Yes, I think so. Almost any incumbent President would do that, and things that he would do would naturally be inclined toward what is best for this country.

as judged by the American voters.
Q: Do you think that the White House perceives foreign policy as your weak suit politically?
A: The White House possibly does. Our comprehensive polling that we have done continuously all year does not reveal that as a concern among the American people. When the specific question has been asked on a nationwide basis, our poll results indicate that the people think I have enough common sense and enough eloquence to represent this country well in discussions of international affairs, and I think most people don't look on our foreign policy as a mysterious circumstance removed from their daily existence.

They look upon it as a practical approach to the difficult questions that are decided most often on an ad hoc basis, and I think they consider that someone who is capable of managing the affairs of a state or a federal government on a domestic plane is very likely to be qualified to deal with foreign affairs as well.

Q: You have criticized various aspects of détente, particularly the wheat deal with the Soviet Union and the agreement to limit ABM's. Do you think that is an effective and sensible way to bargain on strategic arms—to build in order to put ceilings or to reduce, but build first?

A: Well, anyone who thinks that the ABM construction effort was well advised—looking at it in retrospect—to me is foolish. So my answer is no, I don't think that is an advisable procedure. There may be times when it would be adopted, but as a general principle, I think it is a foolish approach.

Q: In the case of the Soviet Union doing things like intervening in Angola, would you favor using our economic leverage and urging our allies to use their economic leverage to try to get the Russians to cease and desist?
A: Yes, I would.

Q: Would that include the cancellation of grain sales?
A: Well, obviously the earlier that you can have a leverage applying, the better your chances are of success. If you wait until a commitment by Russia is already confirmed, it makes it very difficult if not impossible for them to withdraw that commitment because of any detectable pressure from us. So I think the real myth of the relationship that we have had with individual nations under the Ford-Kissinger Administration has put us in the posture quite often of having to face an accomplished fact of an adjustment of our interests.

The singling out of food as a bargaining weapon is something that I would not do. If we want to put economic pressure on another nation under any circumstances, to use it as a lever by withholding our products, I would not single out food as a singular product. It would be a total withholding of trade.

Before Positions Are Firm
Q: Then you would put them on notice in advance?
A: Yes, I would. I think that—before the guns—above the confrontation where firm positions are established is well known by the rest of the world and there has to be a loss of face, or a breaking of a prior commitment in order to accommodate a peaceful relationship. Once you wait until the situation gets in extremis, it is almost impossible to resolve it, short of a Q. Have you taken on the Jackson Amendment that is effect favored-nation status the Soviet Union, Jewish and particular, and if son amendment, if export credits to Union?

A: I think it is amendment and son Amendment taken. If the bill was to continue to rate of out-migration from Russia an instance where Soviet Union has been much more a quiet but firm negotiation than publicized pressure the Soviet Union Congress.
Q: Can you co-situation in the Latin America, Africa—where you American combat

Carter's Foreign Policies Follow Liberal Democratic Pattern

speaking slowly and deliberately, explained how he would propose to attain his goals in foreign policy.

He said he would constantly consult with Congress on the formulation of policy, but would also "make every reasonable attempt to preserve the prerogatives and authority of the President." He opposed efforts by Congress—such as the Jackson amendment, tying a grant of equal trading status for the Soviet Union to Jewish emigration from that country—to legislate foreign policy.

Mr. Carter said he would be the nation's "spokesman" but not his own secretary of state. While coordination "would be my responsibility, I would like to let the Cabinet officers run their own departments," he added.

He seemed to assume throughout the interview, as did his aides and some of his advisers, that he could make good of diverse views work together through "my normal, careful, methodical, scientific or planning approach to longer-range policies."

Sensitive on the Subject
Like Harry S. Truman, Mr. Carter would approach the White House with little background in foreign policy. He and his aides, somewhat sensitive on this subject, are aware that he will have to prove himself in this area, though Mr. Carter's decision to formulate a liberal foreign-policy platform was made in the wake of the 1972 Democratic convention. It was there, they said, that he came to believe that the liberal wing of the party was dominant and would continue to be so, and was deeply committed to a change in foreign policy.

Knowing few foreign-policy experts as scorned by some he sought to contact Mr. Carter began his education with foreign travel and talks with foreign leaders and by existing the services of former Secretary of State Dean Rusk. After a year or so of seminars and conversations arranged by Mr. Rusk, the Carter camp learned that he was considered anathema by some liberal Democrats, and the contacts ceased.

Expedient Action Denied
Many pro- and anti-Carter people who have known the candidate over the years insisted that his new stance was not a matter of expediency but of conviction. To back this up his aides and advisers cited a speech he gave in Tokyo over a year ago, long before he gathered specific knowledge of where the liberals stood and before he acquired a few advisers. That speech contained a recurrent foreign-policy theme: concentration on consultations with such allies as Japan and the Western European countries, not on Soviet-American byplay; no military intervention in the internal affairs of others; openness in policy-making; promotion of human rights and humanitarian concerns.

Shift of Policy Focus
"It is likely in the near future that issues of war and peace will be more a function of economic and social problems than of the military-security problems which have dominated international relations in the world since World War II," he said.

"We can now turn our attention more effectively toward matters like the world economy, freedom of the seas, environmental quality, food, population, peace, conservation of irreplaceable commodities and the reduction of world armaments."
What Mr. Carter's new advisers provided him, beginning early this year, was a unifying theme: "We must replace balance-of-power politics with world-order politics."

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat of Washington, among others, would consider this approach naive and unworkable. To them the dominant factor in world politics remains the Soviet-American equation. Unless the Soviet threat is managed and the balance of power maintained, in their view, all else will fail.

Mr. Carter's position on dealing with the Russians is complex as well as untried.
"Overwhelming Capability"
He has not proposed absolute reductions in defense spending. His call for a 5 to 7 percent cut in the Pentagon's proposed $115 billion budget, according to his aides, would still allow a modest increase in military outlays over last year. Moreover, he made it clear in the interview that he would give advance warning to Moscow of economic sanctions in the event of another situation like that in Angola, where the Communists backed the winner.

Although Mr. Carter, in the interview, rejected the basic Nixon-Ford-Kissinger strategy on the strategic nuclear balance of power, he said—here he concurs with Mr. Kissinger—that he believed that the present "rough equivalency is a very good posture to maintain." The similarity seems to end there, however.

Asked about possible Soviet advantages in certain strategic areas, he answered, "I think that the overwhelming capability of both nations to wreak havoc on the other nation is such an overwhelming consideration compared to whether or not one nation has a slight advantage in a subjective analysis, to me moves that as a major consideration."

From this premise Mr. Carter argued against the possibility of a limited nuclear war and the "regainable chips" approach to nuclear negotiations—both central tenets of the Administration. These considerations have provided the main justification for building new systems of nuclear weapons.
Asked about the wisdom of spending $6 billion on anti-ballistic-missile defense to induce the Russians not to build such missiles, he responded, "Anyone who thinks that the ABM construction effort was well-advised—looking at it in retrospect—to me is foolish."
On the use of force generally he laid out positive and negative injunctions. "If the altercation was internal, a struggle for the control of the government, I can't envision any circumstance under which I would send troops," he said, but he would use force where "national security interests were directly endangered," to evacuate American citizens, or if the Russians invaded a country like Costa Rica.

Continued Aid to Israel
On the Middle East, his previously outlined approach has been to give Israel complete confidence in its relations with the United States as the way to bring about Israeli territorial concessions and an overall peace settlement.
To this he added two points: that even in the absence of a peace settlement "I would continue the economic and military aid to Israel indefinitely," and that he might consider using American forces to help guarantee a territorial settlement but would prefer not to.

other illegal influence on foreign officials."
He said he would make major alternatives available on the Pentagon budget and weapons systems, and "if there was a difference of opinion between the Secretary of Defense or the Joint Chiefs of Staff about the level of funding, I would have no objection to those officials presenting the alternatives to the Congress."

Mr. Carter gave his usual list of advisers, including former top Democratic administration officials like Cyrus S. Vance, George W. Ball and Paul C. Warnke. He added that he had spent more time with either Henry Owen of the Brookings Institution, Prof. Richard N. Gardner of Columbia University or Prof. Zbigniew Brzezinski, also of Columbia, than with any of the others individually.

Speaking of the American people, he said that foreign policy was not "a mysterious circumstance removed from their daily existence."
"They look upon it as a practical approach to the difficult questions that are decided most often on an individual basis," he said, "and I think they consider that someone who is capable of managing the affairs of a state or a federal government or a domestic plane is very likely to be qualified to deal with foreign affairs as well."

Kissinger Calls for a Consensus Of 2 Parties on Foreign Policy

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 6—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said today that the coming election should be a time to build "a new foreign-policy consensus" in this country and that any debate should be conducted in the spirit of partnership.

In a luncheon speech in Chicago, Mr. Kissinger appealed to both parties not to make foreign policy a divisive issue. His remarks seemed consistent with his private assessment that President Ford and Jimmy Carter hold basically similar views on international affairs.

Mr. Kissinger, however, opposes many of the statements made on foreign policy by Ronald Reagan, and if Mr. Reagan wins the nomination over Mr. Ford, Mr. Kissinger's outlook might shift.

Unity in Formulation
Speaking to the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and the Mid-America Committee, Mr. Kissinger said: "This election, whatever its outcome, should be remembered as the time when the American people rediscovered their unity in formulation and execution of foreign policy."

Mr. Kissinger did not break any new ground on substantive issues, repeating much of what he said recently in London about the Western nations' collective strength, and power in all areas.

Maine Names Forestry Aide
AUGUSTA, Me., July 6 (AP)—The Maine Department of Conservation has named Dr. Lloyd Irland, assistant professor of forest economics at Yale University, as forest insect manager of the state Bureau of Forestry.

And I think this rough equivalency is a very good posture to maintain. The inability of either nation to defend itself against a first strike is probably the greatest deterrent to nuclear war and so I don't feel concerned about it.

Q: So we don't need overall numerical equality or equality in numbers of missiles or equality in throw-weight?

A: I don't believe so. I don't believe any one of those factors would be a prime requisite for an agreement.

So you know I would like to, if possible, to reach an agreement with the Soviet Union on definitive and substantial reductions, carefully balanced if possible, in acquiescence to the American voters.

REAGAN ATTACKS CARTER AS VAGUE

'Soothing' Talk and Smiles Will Not Cure Nation's Ills, Californian Says on TV

By JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times
LOS ANGELES, July 6—Ronald Reagan, far from assured of the Republican Presidential nomination, looked beyond his challenge to President Ford today and aimed his rhetorical guns at Jimmy Carter, the apparent Democratic nominee, pausing to take only a little potshot at his fellow Republican.

Ronald Reagan waving to reporters and others as he arrived to tape his speech in Los Angeles Monday night.

Without naming the Georgian, Mr. Reagan appeared to make Mr. Carter his principal target in a 30-minute, paid national telecast when he alluded to "those whose approach to government combine soothing rhetoric, pleasant smiles and reorganization gimmicks."

It was the former California Governor's first formal attack on Mr. Carter, though in the past—in response to questions—he has said that the Democrats were vague on the issues. It was a theme Mr. Reagan emphasized in a speech taped for delivery tonight.

There was only a brief mention of politicians "doing the same old things in a new way," a remark that Mr. Reagan's aides said was directed at the President. References, however, to Mr. Carter were unmistakable.

"You can't get to the heart of an issue by being vague about it," Mr. Reagan said, "and you don't discipline an irresponsible and wasteful Congress by putting an indulgent friend in the White House."

"I'm not asking you to help me because I say, 'Trust me, don't ask questions, and everything will be fine,'" Mr. Reagan declared. "I ask you to trust yourself. Trust your own knowledge of what's happening in America."

"Let me be completely candid: no Presidential candidate has a patent on virtue. But I believe I offer something more than words, and that is my record as Governor of a state which, if it were a nation, would rank the events ranking economic power in the world. I believe I can do the job that needs to be done."

Mr. Carter's primary campaign theme has been built on a base of trust that he could restructure government and create an era of decency and respect in the White House.

Preview of Reagan Plan
Mr. Reagan's speech, coming a week before the Democratic National Convention, gave Republicans a glimpse of what tactics the Californian might use against Mr. Carter if they faced each other in the general election.

Mr. Reagan has argued all along, despite national polls that rebuffed his contention, that he would be a stronger candidate against Mr. Carter than President Ford.

He also made a veiled reference to Mr. Ford when he appeared in group of the President with those who want to approach the nation's problems on a politics-as-usual basis.

"A little government help here, a shrewd political move there," Mr. Reagan remarked. "A little special treatment to this group or that group. A political strategy of one kind or another. But we are out going to get out of the mess we are in simply by doing the same old things in a new way."

Mr. Reagan made a broad appeal to Democrats and independents dissatisfied with the course of events in the country, saying there was a new bipartisan coalition that could be forged in November of voters concerned with "our basic values, Washington's excesses, our declining national defense."

He mentioned a number of what he called national ills, and the list was heavy with issues with special appeal to conservative Democrats, who in recent national elections voted Republican, but who might now be expected to support Mr. Carter.

On the issue of equal rights, he said that the Government was correct in eliminating discrimination in hiring or education, adding:

"But in its zeal to accomplish this worthy purpose, Government orders what is in effect a quota system—but they don't call it a quota system. It is affirmative action program" with goals and timetables for the hiring of particular groups.

"If you happen to belong to an ethnic group not recognized by the Federal Government as entitled to special treatment, you are a victim of reverse discrimination."

"I'd like an opportunity to put an end to this Federal distortion of the principle of equal rights."

He also argued that Government intrusion into the personal lives of Americans had led to the decline of the family, neighborhoods and community. He used illustrations of mandatory school busing and welfare abuses to stress his point.

Mr. Reagan said that his own record as a two-term Governor of California demonstrated that "government can be energetic without being intrusive, helpful without being domineering, and efficient without being dictatorial."

The speech, the second nationally televised half-hour program the Californian has paid for, was carried by ABC at a cost to the Reagan forces of $80,000.

The first talk was in April when he was trailing far behind the President in delegate votes and campaign funds. It was credited with opening new sources of contributions from conservative Democrats and independents and also marked the turning point where he began receiving large-scale support from former supporters of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

The challenger will resume his search for Republican delegates tomorrow, when he will fly to Fargo, N.D., where a state party convention will be held. He then will go to Chicago and to the Colorado state convention later in the week.

29 Democratic Governors Vote to Support Carter

By R. W. APPLE JR.
Special to The New York Times

HERSHEY, Pa., July 6—Settling aside old antagonisms in the interest of party unity, 29 of the nation's 38 Democratic governors endorsed Jimmy Carter for President this morning.

Mr. Carter, who won a reputation among his colleagues as a loner and a self-promoter during his four years as Governor of Georgia, has virtually wrapped up the Democratic Presidential nomination without their help. Not a single governor supported him in the early phases of his campaign, and only six endorsed him before the final primaries on June 8.

They fell into line this morning, prodded by Robert S. Strauss, the Democratic national chairman. Recognizing the inevitability of Mr. Carter's nomination, and hungry for control of the White House, even the Georgian's critics went along.

Role of Healer Seen
Gov. Marvin Mandel of Maryland, who backed Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California in the Maryland primary while accusing Mr. Carter of being a welsler, introduced a resolution calling him a man who had proved that he could "lead the divisions of the past" within the party.

"I support him wholeheartedly," said Mr. Mandel, who told a reporter just two months ago that the Georgian's nomination would constitute a "total disaster."

Only one of the 30 Democratic governors attending the 88th National Governors' Conference here absented himself from the festival of party harmony—Gov. Edwin W. Edwards of Louisiana, who attended neither the breakfast meeting where the endorsement was voted nor Mr. Carter's subsequent news conference.

"I don't know enough about him to either object to him or endorse him," said Mr. Edwards, a colorful and independent Cajun who was resident today in a white suit, white vest, black tie and black and white shirt.

Southern Role Minimized
Mr. Edwards said he intended to continue his support of Mr. Brown "as long as he wants to play Doo Quixote." He felt regional pressure to back Mr. Carter, said Mr. Edwards, added because "nobody I know views Carter as a traditional Southerner or as a spokesman for Southern beliefs."

Of the six Democratic governors who skipped the conference, only Mr. Brown, who has never attended a governors' meeting of any kind, is still considered hostile to Mr. Carter. Several of the others, such as Gov. Ella T. Grasso of Connecticut, have already endorsed him.

In addition to Mrs. Grasso and Mr. Brown, the missing Governors were Robert Straub of Oregon, George C. Wallace of Alabama, Thomas L. Judge of Montana and Cliff Finch of Mississippi.

Noting that no former governor has served in the White House since Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mr. Carter said in a 15-minute speech that the period since had been marked by the "erosion of the role of the states." He proposed, "to create a Federal-state partnership that will provide predictable, adequate assistance to enable states to meet their legitimate needs."

Instead of serving as centers of innovation, Mr. Carter told the Democratic governors at their closed breakfast meeting, states have been "trapped between the Federal bureaucracy and the local bureaucracy that have been created to cope with all the Federal programs."

He praised "Woodrow Wilson's prescription that the states be 'laboratories for experimentation.'"

Welfare Uniformity Used
Addressing the question of welfare reform, one of the prime topics of this conference, Mr. Carter urged "one fairly uniform national standard of care" be adopted to the extent feasible for cost of living differences by areas and with strong work incentives built in.

Mr. Carter said at his news conference that there had been no discussion during the meeting of his view, which is unpopular among the governors, that Federal revenue-sharing funds should flow directly to localities rather than passing through state governments.

Before returning to his home in Plains, Ga., Mr. Carter met with Gov. David L. Boren of Oklahoma to seek his advice on energy policy. Governor Boren, who advocates the deregulation of natural-gas prices, is in general seen as a friend of the oil and gas industry.

Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine met at length in Platts yesterday with Mr. Carter, the first of the Vice-Presidential prospects to have had such a face-to-face consultation. Mr. Carter is also reportedly seriously considering Senators John Glenn of Ohio, Frank Church of Idaho, Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Abraham A. Ribicoff of Connecticut.

Remarks made by Mr. Carter in recent days indicate that he will invite at least three of them to meet with him, either in Georgia or in New York, where he will go Saturday to prepare for the national convention. Mr. Carter has also said that he wants to retain the "option" to consider closely still others if he feels dissatisfied with the preliminary discussions.

Governors Urge Single Welfare Plan With National Minimum and Job

By SETH S. KING
Special to The New York Times

HERSHEY, Pa., July 6—The nation's governors urged the Ford Administration and Congress today to establish a single, simplified program of federally assisted welfare payments.

The governors also asked for a national minimum level for such payments, with regional variations based on the cost of living, and urged that most able-bodied welfare recipients be required to register for work and to accept jobs if offered them.

But after some wrangling and a vote of 24 to 11, the governors present inserted a clause in their welfare resolution making it clear that they were not endorsing guaranteed annual income in any form.

Welfare reform was the principal issue occupying them during the 88th annual meeting of the National Governors' Conference, held for the last two days at Chocolate Town, the spacious convention center in Hershey.

Their demand for sweeping welfare reforms was the final item of business this afternoon, before the governors boarded helicopters to fly to Philadelphia and join their wives for a meeting with Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip aboard the royal yacht Britannia.

Federal Participation
Their resolution called for full Federal financing of the minimum welfare benefits, with the Federal Government paying 75 percent of all state supplementations and 75 percent of each state's welfare administration costs.

At the close of the session, Gov. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine said that he believed the next year's Governor Carter will be held in Deeds Gov. Robert Iowa.

Mondale to Visit Carter Over No. 2 Spot

By CHARLES MORR
Special to The New York Times

HERSHEY, Pa., July 6—Jimmy Carter disclosed today that Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota would be the second person invited to meet with the former Georgia Governor on the possibility of becoming the Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee.

Mr. Carter, who is assured of the Presidential nomination at his party's convention in New York next week, said at a news conference that Senator Mondale, who is 48 years old, would visit him Thursday at his Plains, Ga., home.

Mr. Mondale is perhaps the most liberal person on Mr. Carter's list of Vice-Presidential finalists, and is widely respected for his grasp of the complicated work of the Senate Finance Committee, to which he serves.

Talks With Bush
Mr. Carter also disclosed at the news conference that he met here last night with George Bush, Director of Central Intelligence, to discuss procedures to be followed so that after the nomination Mr. Carter can receive regular briefings from the Central Intelligence Agency in the general election campaign.

Mr. Carter also said he met this morning with Gov. David L. Boren of Oklahoma to seek his advice on energy policy. Governor Boren, who advocates the deregulation of natural-gas prices, is in general seen as a friend of the oil and gas industry.

Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine met at length in Platts yesterday with Mr. Carter, the first of the Vice-Presidential prospects to have had such a face-to-face consultation. Muskie Says Reagan May Defeat Ford

Special to The New York Times

BANGOR, Me., July 6—Senator Edmund S. Muskie said here today that he believed Jimmy Carter tended to regard Ronald Reagan as a tougher campaigner than President Ford.

The Maine Democrat held a news conference after returning from Plains, Ga., where he discussed the Vice Presidency with the former Georgia Governor.

The Senator said that Mr. Reagan "conceivably could be a stronger candidate in terms of his ability to use television, the enthusiastic support of his hard-core supporters, and so on. He could be a more aggressive, more photogenic, more articulate challenger."

"On the other hand," Mr. Muskie added, "Ford has all the advantages of an incumbent President, which are not inconsiderable. So I suspect that Governor Carter would have a mixed feeling about them both. I think he tends to regard Reagan as a potentially tougher campaigner, but Ford, nevertheless, a tough opponent because he is President."

Mr. Muskie said that although the polls might show Mr. Reagan weaker, "the delegate count is very close and that's bound to be regarded as a weakness for an incumbent President."

He added that "in addition, a lot of Ford support is said to be soft, so I think that it's conceivable that Reagan, given some slight quirk of events, could build momentum that would give Reagan the nomination."

Woman Who Refused Work On Sabbath Gets Job Back

LANSING, Mich., July 6 (AP)—The Michigan Civil Rights Commission today ordered reinstatement with full back pay for a Seventh Day Adventist who was discharged when she refused to work on Saturdays.

The commission said the Michigan Masonic Home in Alma, a nursing home, illegally discriminated against the woman, June Brown, of Ashley, because of her religion.

Seventh Day Adventists observe their Sabbath from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday and are forbidden to work in that time. Mrs. Brown was discharged in 1973 when she did not work overtime on a Saturday.

Church and Brown Top Choices In Delegate Vice-President Poll

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—Two Democratic politicians who defeated Jimmy Carter several times in the late primaries, Senator Frank Church of Idaho and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, top the convention delegates' list of possible Vice-Presidential candidates, according to the continuing Associated Press survey of delegates.

The survey found that a majority of the delegates did not express a choice for the second spot on the ticket.

Of the 1,192 delegates who did give their preference, 203 named Mr. Church and 188 cited Mr. Brown as their choice for Vice President. The two were also the top choices for the second spot among just the delegates who said they are committed to Mr. Carter.

Mr. Carter has not said that either Mr. Brown or Mr. Church is on his list of possible running mates. And Mr. Carter's preference for the Vice President is probably the only one that counts.

Mr. Carter has said that Senators Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota and Edmund S. Muskie of Maine are on his list of five possible contenders for the second spot on the Democratic ticket. He has not named the three others.

Mr. Mondale ranks fourth in the delegates' choices for the second spot, with 98 naming him in the A.P. survey. Of those 98, 67 are Carter delegates.

Mr. Muskie is further down the delegates' list. Only 17 delegates picked him for the second spot, good for 13th out of the more than 60 politicians and nonpoliticians named by the delegates.

Mr. Carter says he will interview the potential running mates before the convention. He began the process yesterday with talks with Muskie in Plains, Ga.

Mr. Church, who defeated Mr. Carter in primaries in Nebraska, Montana, Oregon, and Idaho, was named by 134 of the 1,503 Carter delegates interviewed thus far.

Mr. Brown, who defeated Mr. Carter in Maryland, Nevada and California primaries, was the Vice-Presidential choice of 122 Carter delegates.

After Mr. Brown and Mr. Church, in order of total number of delegate mentions, were Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III of Illinois, chosen by 121 delegates, and Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana by 87.

Kennedy Faces Four Rivals In Massachusetts Primary

BOSTON, July 6 (AP)—Senator Edward M. Kennedy, who filed today 100,000 signatures for re-election, will face four opponents in the Democratic primary.

Unopposed for the Republican nomination for the Senate, according to a report from the State Elections Divisions, is Michael S. Robertson, a Berkeley Selectman.

Competing with Mr. Kennedy for the Democratic nomination are Robert Dinsmore of Milton, Councilman Frederick Langone of Boston, Albert Onessimo of Somerville and Bernard Shannon of Stoughton.

PRESIDENT VETOS PUBLIC JOBS BILL

"a cruel blow to the hopes of the nation's stricken cities and to the unemployed, especially in the hardhit construction industry." The House passed the revised measure, by a vote of 328 to 83, and the Senate adopted it, 70 to 25. Both margins would be enough to enact the bill over a veto but Republicans tend, especially in the Senate, to consider party loyalty in casting an override vote. Although the President did not mention Jimmy Carter, the apparent Democratic nominee, the implication of veto message was that Mr. Ford would try to link the former Georgia Governor to the Congressional Democrats' sponsorship of the bill. Mr. Carter has endorsed public works programs as a means of lowering unemployment. The measure would allocate $2 billion over 15 months for public works projects, such as office buildings and sewer lines, that would create jobs. It also would provide $1.25 billion in "countercyclical" antirecession funds to assist states and localities, and $700 million for waste water treatment projects. Sponsors of the measure contend that it would create or preserve at least 300,000 jobs, but Mr. Ford said Administration economists estimated it would produce no more than 160,000 jobs and would disrupt his efforts to revive the economy without sparking new inflation. Reading a statement before television cameras, the President asked voters to tell vacationing members of Congress to sustain the veto and to enact the Administration's proposal to reduce Federal income taxes by $10 billion beyond the level approved last year by Congress. "If the American people want to hold down Federal spending and have the additional tax cuts I proposed, now is the time to say so, loud and clear," Mr. Ford said. Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhattan, typified the reaction of sponsors in declaring that the veto meant "the White House appears determined to keep Americans out of work." The President today also directed the Interior and Transportation Departments to investigate reports that the trans-Alaska oil pipeline has even more than the 3,955 potentially faulty welds estimated by a consortium constructing the 800-mile pipeline. Mr. Ford asked John Barnum, the Under Secretary of Transportation, to lead a fact-finding team to the pipeline site next week. Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, said that Mr. Ford assessed the weekend of Bicentennial celebrations by remarking that they showed a renewal of national unity, friendliness and pride.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Amish residents of Indiana have asked to be exempted on religious grounds from a new law requiring photographs on driver licenses. The Amish religion does not permit its members to be photographed, church leaders say. Most Amish shun the use of modern gadgetry, including automobiles, relying on horse, or ox drawn wagons for transportation. But younger Amish have begun using motor vehicles. About 300 members of the sect are licensed to drive in Indiana, officials said. The Amish have asked the Indiana Motor Vehicles Commissioner, Ralph Van Natta, to exempt them from the law. "The Amish are magnificent people, and I would love to take care of it for them," said Mr. Van Natta. "But I'm afraid we might then be swamped with requests from other groups for exemptions."

size experimentation to earth orbit instead of attempts to land men on the moon, as the United States did. But the program has had at least one known setback, the failure in April 1975 of a spacecraft to dock with the orbiting station Salyut 4. A successful docking was made later that spring, when two astronauts lived in the station for 63 days during the unrelated Apollo-Soyuz mission, in which American and Soviet astronauts linked their space vessels in orbit. In mid-June, the two Soviet astronauts who flew that mission to Salyut 4 told an international space science meeting in Philadelphia that Salyut 5 might house men in orbit for three months. The two, Pyotr I. Klimuk and Vitaly L. Sevast'yanov, said that the Salyut stations weighed 19 tons and could accommodate up to six astronauts. They said that Salyut 5 would have two docking ports for two Soyuz ships simultaneously. They added that there was some debate within Soviet science on whether a station larger than Salyut 5 should be developed. They also disclosed that Salyut 4, still in orbit, would not be manned again. Six hours after the launching, Tass reported that Soyuz 21 had orbited the earth four times and that Colonel Volynov had reported that the astronauts "feel well and are fulfilling the flight program." From midnight to eight A.M. tomorrow, Moscow time, Tass said, the astronauts will be resting while their capsule orbits outside of radio range. The spacecraft was reported to be orbiting at between 157 and 159 miles from the earth, at an inclination of 51.6 degrees. The commander of Soyuz 21, Colonel Volynov, was born in the Siberian city of Irkutsk, completed the Volgograd Air Force School course and graduated from the Zhukovsky Air Force Engineering Academy. He became an astronaut in 1960. His wife, Tamara, is an engineer. He has a son and a daughter. The flight engineer, Colonel Zholobov, was born in the Ukraine, grew up in the Caucasian Republic of Azerbaijan, graduated from the Oil and Chemistry Institute in Baku, and became a test engineer in the army. He joined the corps of astronaut in 1963. His wife, Lilia, is an engineer. They have a daughter.

Check Finds No Problem Viking 1's 2d Landing Site

Calif., July 6. Photographs released here yesterday showed another region that could become the landing site for Viking 2, now on its way to Mars. The pictures showed a cratered landscape that reminded many scientists of plains on the moon. Some of the craters were nearly filled with windblown sand, and around them, smooth deposits of sand or volcanic lava created featureless plains. "This is the kind of material we would like to use to locate landing sites," said Dr. Michael Carr, geologist with the Viking team. Another photo showed the bottom of a canyon that is part of the 3,000-mile-long system of canyons running the Martian crust near its equator. The canyon bottom was filled with sand dunes, each measuring 1,500 feet across. The dunes were piled up by the fierce Martian winds that helped dig out the canyon. Dr. Carr said the dune fields were much like those on the earth, particularly in Peru, Southern California and Arizona.

LA BREAKS WITH URUGUAY

Venezuela, July 6. Venezuela announced today that it had broken diplomatic relations with Uruguay over a violation of "the right to asylum." The Ministry said the Venezuelan Government had taken this action because of the arrest of a Venezuelan national in Montevideo, Julio Gonzalez, who was held in a non-grate facility. The arrest began June 28 and lasted over a week. The Venezuelan Government accused Mr. Gonzalez of having contributed to "an international campaign to defame the image of Uruguay and create a negative atmosphere impeding the understanding of the episode."

State Dinner for Queen Elizabeth: 224 Guests—and a Time Clock

By MIMI SHERATON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 6—The lobsters have been glazed and decked out with black truffles; saddles of veal are stuffed, rolled and ready for roasting; rice croquettes are set to be popped into the deep fryer; fluted bombes of peach ice cream with brandy are waiting.

In other words, all is ready to come forth and be finished tomorrow night as Henry Haller, the White House chef, puts the last touches on a state dinner marking the Bicentennial with Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip as the honored guests at a dinner for 224 persons.

Preparations began in the modest-sized white tile and stainless steel kitchen of the White House early today. They were interrupted for two hours while Julia Child and a television camera crew rolled to for the filming of a segment showing how the dishes were made. It was to be shown tomorrow night (in New York on Channel 13 at 8 P.M.) while the dinner is in progress.

Entrance doorways leading to the Rose Garden, where the dinner will be held, were being given a fresh coat of white paint and the lawns were being clipped. A huge white tent hung with enormous Japanese lanterns and an air-circulating apparatus was being rigged while Mr. Haller explained how he plans a menu.

25 Lobsters Prepared

"First of all, you use what is seasonal," Chef Haller explained. "You do not adjust the seasons to the menu; it should be the other way around. Then it should be possible to do some of the preparation in advance." As he spoke he showed a walk-in refrigerator in which 25 giant 4-pound lobsters were cooked, glazed and mounted up on their front haunches, ready to go.

As usual when the menu for a state dinner is being planned, the State Department informed the chef as to any foods the guests of honor do not eat. In this case, raw fish was the only restriction.

"That's not much of a problem for the Queen here, of course," Mr. Haller observed. "But I guess it is when she visits the Japanese or the Eskimos. With Prince Philip, it's no problem at all. He's an old Navy man and eats everything. But I guess these people who go to such dinners all the time, learn to eat a lot of things they don't like."

It is also necessary that every course be served at a specified time and that the dinner end within a precisely appointed time span. Tomorrow night's event must last at least one hour, but not more than 1 hour and 15 minutes. For this reason, no dishes can be included unless they can be at the ready. "That means no soufflés, for example," Mr. Haller said somewhat longingly. "I then might need an extra 10 minutes and there's no way that can happen, no way at all."

Explains About Cookies

Showing off the desserts—the pale golden ice cream bombe with its wreath of fresh raspberries and ruffles of whipped cream—Heinz H. Bender, the White House pastry chef, said, as he passed around the dessert cookies, "Washington is not a cookie town. There's too much humidity and they get soggy. I have to bake them fresh every day."

"They don't taste at all like soap to me," teased Hans Raffert, the sous-chef, in the spirit of good-natured kidding that is traditional between cooks and bakers.

"How would you know about taste?" Mr. Bender retorted. "You are a painter who only cooks when he gets mad."

Through it all, Henry Haller went on with his step-by-step performance as the cameras, turned and Julia Child tried to put him at ease.

"I'm not at all nervous about this, but there are too many people in a little kitchen," he said, his hand trembling as he gulped down his fifth glass of water in 20 minutes.

The veal saddles, Mr. Haller said, cost $1,000 for 26, and the lobsters, called New England on the menu although purchased from a wholesaler in New York, were obtained at an unnamed price.

Wendy Sorg, a graduate of the Culinary Institute of America, in Hyde Park, N.Y., has been assisting in this kitchen for only two days and stood by drinking a diet cola and waiting to taste samples offered. She approved—as did all who tried them—the crisp rice croquettes to be served in pale golden baskets baked of the woven ooked dough, and the brandy-spiked ice cream bombe with fresh berries.

Apples, that's my touch in vegetable salad," Chef Haller explained proudly to Julia Child, while the pastry chef explained sotto voce that the Spritzbacken cookies glazed with chocolate came from a recipe given to him by Julie Eisenhower.

Talk of Previous Presidents

The White House experience of both Mr. Haller and Mr. Bender extends back through several Administrations and two men paused from time to time to remark on the preferences of previous Presidents.

"Nixon didn't eat many things," recalled Chef Haller, who was hired by President and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson 10 years ago. "He didn't like lamb or calves liver or a lot of things, and it was hard to make up an interesting menu. The Fords like almost everything—even liver and red cabbage cooked with wine, the French way."

"The Nixons liked plain sponge cake with lemon filling and coconut meringue," Heinz Bender explained, "but the Fords like vanilla pastry cream in sponge cake. Real plain. President Johnson—now he really had a sweet tooth but bad to watch his weight, so I made everything with Sucaryl."

"I wish someone would invent lemons without seeds," Chef Haller remarked as he garnished a lobster platter, and if he isn't careful, they probably will.

Through it all, one could not help wondering if a really imaginative, thoroughly American dinner might not have been more interesting and appropriate to the occasion than this menu which, though elegant and appetizing, was all-purpose international.

The 224 guests expected at the white-tie dinner will be seated in groups of eight and 10 at round tables covered with summery cloths of mist gray cotton printed with sprigs of daisies and bands of pink ribbon. Each table will have a centerpiece of mixed summer flowers, adding a soft impressionistic touch to the garden setting, as will, undoubtedly, the women guests in their long summer dresses.

In addition to Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip, guests at the head table will include President and Mrs. Ford, Vice President and Mrs. Rockefeller, Secretary of State and Mrs. Kissinger, and British Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland and Mrs. Crosland.

Bob Hope, British-born and recently named an honorary Commander of the British Empire, will entertain following the dinner, as will the pop singers, the Captain and Tennille.

Other notable guests will include Alice Loogworth, Lady Bird Johnson, Helen Hayes, Julie Harris, Eugene Ormandy, "Merle Oberon, Dorothy Hamill, Bill Blass, Alistair Cooke, Cary Grant, Willie Mays and Telly Savalas, with or without a lollipop.

In addition to tomorrow's dinner, Chef Raffert will be preparing a private luncheon in the second-floor White House kitchen to be served only to President and Mrs. Ford and the Royal couple.

They will begin with cold cucumber soup, go to crepes filled with diced capon and mushrooms, spinach salad and champagne mousses trimmed with frosted seedless grapes.

Henry Haller, White House chef, prepares food for state dinner for Queen Elizabeth.

Saddle of Veal

This is a very large and costly roast, not usually cooked at home. The recipe below can be adjusted to any boned veal roast, including rump, leg or shoulder or even breast of veal. Decrease the amount of stuffing in direct proportion to the weight of the roast.

12- to 14-pound saddle of veal
1 cup soft breadcrumbs
1/2 clove garlic, minced
1/2 teaspoon thyma, lightly crushed

1/2 teaspoon marjoram
1/2 cup finely minced parsley
1/2 cup finely minced shallots
1 ounce jigger of cognac
2 egg yolks, beaten

Salt and white pepper to 1/2 cup heavy sweet cream
Few drops Worcestershire sauce
4 tablespoons softened butter
2 1/2 cups veal stock
1 1/2 cups dry white chablis wine

1. Preheat oven to 375 degrees.
2. The veal should be completely boned, with the tenderloin strip along the back removed and ground. This will be the filling. When the saddle is boned, you will have two flat pieces of meat.

3. Combine ground veal with breadcrumbs, garlic, thyme, marjoram, parsley, shallots, cognac and egg yolks and mix thoroughly but lightly, using a fork so mixture does not become too firmly compact. Add salt and pepper. Gradually beat in cream and Worcestershire until mixture is the consistency of very firm mashed potatoes or oatmeal. Divide filling in half and place in a strip in the cavity left when the bones were removed. Roll jellyroll fashion, starting at wide end. Tie securely with butcher's string, as for a rolled roast.

4. Turn saddle of veal over and loosely pack stuffing along cavity on underside. Close flaps over it and sew closed with small close stitches. Place on rack in open roasting pan, sewn side down. Rub top with softened butter, sprinkle with salt and pepper and roast until tender; about 45 to 55 minutes.
5. When done, remove veal to a heated platter warm.

6. Pour off all a from pan juices and stock and wine; boil in all coagulated y with a wooden spoon rapidly until reduced by half and serve in a heated to be spooned over veal roast.
Yield: 12 servings.

Rice Croquettes

3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
1 cup veal or chicken stock, boiling

2 egg yolks, lightly beaten
Pinch of white pepper
Salt, as needed
Dash of freshly grated nutmeg

1/2 cup finely minced, cooked Virginia ham
2 cups cooked white rice
1 tablespoon finely minced parsley

2 eggs, as needed, each
Flour for dredging
2 eggs beaten with 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
About 2 cups sifted breadcrumbs, for dredging
Vegetable oil or shortening for deep frying.

1. Melt butter in a small saucepan and stir in flour over low heat. Let blended mixture bubble slowly for about 5 minutes, but be sure it does not darken or turn brown. Pour in boiling stock, all at once, beating as you do so. Simmer uncovered for 10 minutes. Remove from heat and rapidly beat in 2 egg yolks. Stir in salt, pepper and nutmeg.
2. Fold in ham, rice and parsley, and adjust seasonings as needed. Chill for at least one hour and preferably two.
3. Shape into 12 equal size croquettes, each about 2 inches long and 3/4 inch in diameter. Ends should be flat, not tapered. Roll each gently and lightly then coat with egg mixture and final well with breadcrumb on a rack set over platter to dry out 1 hour at room temperature.

4. Heat oil or fat a few at a time, to minutes until golden. Drain on absorbent paper 10 or 15 minutes on rack set over a degree oven.
Variation: For coating eliminate dredging and dip first in breadcrumb egg and finally in flour.
Yield: 6 servings.

Late Dinner Recipes (Cont'd)

Broccoli Mornay

Haller's variation on sauce mornay comes with a velouté and is then lightened with whipped cream. The version, consisting of those flavors, but the process somewhat of chicken milk of broccoli on butter spoonfuls flour grated Parmesan egg yolks, beaten thin butter spoonfuls in juice and white pepper salt whipped cream and grated cheese topping. broccolo into small flowerets, reserving leaves and stems for later use in a soup. Wash flowerets well and cook for about 8 minutes in rapidly boiling, well-salted water until tender but still firmly al dente. Drain in a colander and blanch under cold running water. Drain on absorbent paper towel. Arrange in a single layer in one or two lightly buttered gratin dishes.

2. Melt butter in a large saucepan and when it is hot, stir in flour. Let bubble very gently over very low heat for 3 or 4 minutes. Bring veal stock and milk to a boil together and pour all at once into bubbling roux, stirring constantly. Simmer uncovered for about 5 minutes, stirring frequently until sauce is thick and smooth. Stir in cheese and butter, over low heat, until cheese and butter are completely

3. Slowly pour some of hot sauce into beaten egg yolks, beating constantly as you do so. When half the sauce has been added, slowly pour egg mixture back into sauce remaining in the saucepan, beating constantly. Heat for 2 or 3 minutes, stirring, being careful not to let sauce boil. Remove from heat and adjust seasonings, adding lemon juice, salt and pepper. Cool to lukewarm. Fold in whipped cream.

4. Pour sauce over cooked broccoli in 12-inch long, oval gratin dish. Broccoli should be well covered with sauce. Dot liberally with butter and sprinkle with a thin layer of grated cheese. Place under hot broiler for about 7-8 minutes, or until sauce is bubbling and golden brown on top. Serve immediately. Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

New England Lobster en Bellevue, Sauce Remoulade

2 cups diced celery
1 cup peeled and diced apple
Salt and white pepper
1 cup mayonnaise (approximately)

Combine vegetables and diced apples in a large bowl, sprinkle with a little salt and pepper and toss lightly with a fork. Add 1/2 cup mayonnaise, toss to distribute evenly, then add more as needed. Be careful that you do not mash the vegetables as you stir. Chill one or two hours before serving, but do not let it stand longer than that, or the celery will make the dressing watery.

Variation: Substitute 2 cups diced cooked celery root for the fresh celery. Yield: 7 cups

Remoulade Sauce:
2 cups mayonnaise
Lemon juice, as needed
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard, or to taste
1/2 teaspoon salt, or to taste
3 tablespoons drained, minced sour gherkins (cornichons)
3 tablespoons, minced, well-drained capers
1 tablespoon minced fresh chervil, or 1 1/2 teaspoons dried

1 tablespoon minced fresh tarragon, or 1 1/2 teaspoons dried

1. If mayonnaise is purchased ready-made it may need a little thinning. If so, use a little lemon juice, beating it in gradually, until mayonnaise is the consistency of yogurt. Beat in mustard and salt, adjusting both to taste.

2. Stir in gherkins and capers, and finally, the herbs. Chill several hours before serving and adjust seasonings at that time. Yield: 2 1/2 cups

To serve:
Whether you use a platter or set this out on individual salad plates, it is a good idea to arrange each serving on a lettuce leaf. Heap a portion of vegetable salad on the lettuce and on top of that put the tail and claw meat of one lobster. Pass the dressing in a separate, chilled sauce boat. This version of Chef Haller's spectacular eliminates the medallions, but if you want them, buy a 2-pound lobster, cook and chill it then pull out the tail meat without splitting the shell in half so you can slice circular medallions, each topped with a slice of pimento and truffle.

Rest Your Weary Head On a Flower Or a Shell

By RUTH ROBINSON

Janet Girard sits in her light, airy NoHo loft apartment on a sofa massed with the pansies, roses, black-eyed Susans, maple leaves, lily pads, conch and clam shells she ships out all over the country, even to Amarillo, Tex., her hometown.

Realistic as the flowers, leaves and shells may appear, they are actually pillows that Miss Girard likes to think of as multiple soft sculptures. Although the manufacturing process in the studio behind has been simplified considerably, it still involves five or six different steps and a good deal of hand work. Each piece, for example, has to be air brushed and quilted.

The former home furnishings designer for Simplicity Patterns has given up trying to second-guess her public: Trying to figure out why morning glories don't sell . . . why she can't keep up with the demand for scallops . . . why customers prefer satin to silk.

"At least I've gotten them used to shaped pillows," she said, although she admitted she still runs into the occasional person who says, "They're real nice, but I want them square."

Miss Girard has concentrated on some 30 different pillow styles that sell for $38 to $55 at Saks Fifth Avenue, Henri Bendel, and Ed Stuffer, 1190 Third Avenue near 70th Street. Smaller sachets are $18 and $20. Leaves come only in colors true to nature, but anything goes for flowers and shells. Yellow, lime and even pink scallops are popular for summer.

As a concession to Bicentennial fever, the designer has stepped out of character with a silk-screened flag in red, white and blue. This is available in silk, satin or cotton at $20 with gold braid, $15 without, from 801 Madison Ltd., Madison Avenue near 68th Street, or from Miss Girard herself, 982-7369.

There's a new summer bag on the market combining the roominess and practicality of the canvas tote with the security and style of the so-called Bermuda bag with its cedar handles and button-on covers to match everything from tartan suit to linen dress that vacationers bring back in triumph from the island in the Atlantic.

The tote, made by the Acricite Company of

The New York Times/D. Gordon

One of the nice things about New York

A Cooking Demonstration It's Like a Vaudeville Act

By FRED FERRETTI

"What are cloud ears?" asked the woman, one of a crowd of about 30 people sitting in chairs in the restaurant in Chinatown.

"How do I know? Take it home and have it put in a Tiffany setting," said Ken Martin. "Imagine her. I should charge extra for information like that. This is a cooking demonstration. Who knows from cloud ears?"

He paused, took out a deck of cards, shuffled them, had them run up his arm, then he called out, "San, come out San." Out came San Wong.

"Ladies and gentlemen, meet the fastest wok in the east. I'm an entertainer, a magician. He's really a magician. Give him a hand."

The people clapped. They're not exactly Weber and Fields nor Smith and Dale, nor even The Sunshine Boys, but they work off each other in the truest burlesque-vaudeville traditions.

They call themselves Wong and Martin, their slogan is "Have Wok, Will Travel," and when they're not doing their cooking-vaudeville act at the Aquarium or at other public buildings and events around town, they bring it home to San Wong's Hunan Garden Restaurant at 1 Mott Street the last Sunday of every month.

So it was last Sunday that Wong and Martin—San Wong, owner and chef of the Hunan Garden, and Ken Martin, born Kominski, a veteran of thousands of burlesque and vaudeville gigs—opened in Chinatown, Mr. Wong brought the ingredients for Heng Yang Spicy Scallops. Mr. Martin his three-card monte deck of cards, his Borscht Belt sticks and a line of patter.

Seventeen bowls filled with sliced scallops, red and green peppers, water chestnuts, cloud ears, scallions, ginger, garlic hoisin sauce, chili paste, soy sauce, white pepper, sugar and sherry stood off to the side of Mr. Wong's portable stove, a stainless steel affair fed from underneath by a tube of kerosene. Mr. Wong wore a chef's hat, the band of which was a gingham print. His shirt had matching gingham shoulders.

Mr. Martin wore a silk patterned shirt, a rather skimpy ascot and he kept wiggling the fingers of his card-dealing hand, warming up while Mr. Wong lighted the kerosene jets. On the portable stove it read, "Free Cooking Class, Director: Ken Martin, Instructor: San Wong," and while it was in a sense a demonstration of cooking, it was more an act, an act that Mr. Wong's customers and Mr. Martin's fans have come to appreciate for the last two years.

Mr. Martin did something similar years ago at another Chinatown restaurant, but without the vaudeville turns. "It was serious," he scowled.

Chinese cooking is a citywide, perhaps a nationwide fad. Demonstrations abound. Classes are many. For many learners Chinese cooking is grim, treacherous territory. What Mr. Wong and Mr. Martin seem to be doing is bringing some fun to the genre. Mr. Wong lighted his kerosene. Mr. Martin said out of the side of his mouth, "Say a silent prayer for stove. It would be a big help. I however that I will stand in. While we're waiting close your eye count one—two—three."

They did. "Now open."

They did. "You missed the first recipe," stopped. The kerosene fire was so up about two feet. "What's wrong?"

"Something's wrong," said Mr. Wong. "I'll get a different tank." He snuffed the flame and ran to the rear of restaurant.

Mr. Martin made a swan out of a balloon. He did a card trick. "Isn't a silly thing for a grown-up to do?" asked. "Sao, hurry back. I'm keeping them here so far, but I haven't much more. You know," he said in a whisper to the people sitting at the table. "The man is a nut but he knows cooking."

Mr. Wong lighted his fire and said "No smoke."

Mr. Wong poured peanut oil into wok.

"It's important to heat the thoroughly. Use peanut oil or We oil. When you finish with it, refrigerate it. It's very flavorful. You know you know when the oil is hot enough. Throw in a scallop. If it drops down not hot enough. If it swizzles bubbles it's O.K. Notice San's sc is swizzling?"

In went the scallops, the red and green pepper, the water chest the cloud ears, scallions, ginger, garlic. "Notice the green and red c we worked that out," said Mr. Ma

Mr. Wong drained the scallops vegetables, set them aside, then poured sauce ingredients — soy sauce, v pepper, sugar, salt, sherry, v chicken stock, chili paste, hoisin s and sesame oil, all combined into wok. When they bubbled the scal and vegetables went back in, together with a bit of cornstarch. Then Mr. W flipped the contents skyward sev times, grinning as the crowd winced the flying scallops.

"Don't leave yet," said Mr. Martin. "Everybody gets a taste." He looks Mr. Wong. "It's all right, you can flip."

"Next time you cook, I'll do the plaoation," said Mr. Wong.

"Funny. He's funny. Ladies gentlemen lets hear it for chef W. A little encouragement."

Applause. Small dishes, samples, were passed out to the audience together with minders that Wong and Martin will back at Hunan Garden on July 25 2 P.M. And, said Mr. Martin, "for this month I want you to think. Promise me that you'll never, ever use Amer soy sauce. Promise!"

Fraud Bills Seek Triple Damages

By FRANCES CERRA
Two bills that would make it possible for individual consumers to sue for triple damages if they were defrauded have passed the United States Senate, but may die in the House of Representatives this year.

One of the bills defines as criminal five specific frauds, including bait and switch selling, false advertising and the refusal to return the purchase price or deposits on goods or services if they have not been delivered or performed.

The other bill deals specifically with pyramid chain frauds. These schemes are similar to chain letters in that each recruit's ability to get rich quick is dependent on his ability to bring other converts into the company. Federal prosecutors have dealt with all of these types of frauds primarily through the mail fraud statute, or with civil actions, whereas local attorneys general and district attorneys have used whatever state laws were available. The case of Koscot Interplanetary Inc., a cosmetics concern involved in pyramid promotion sales, is one example of the lack of effectiveness of these efforts: when the Federal Trade Commission declared that company's marketing plan illegal last December, it apologized for the four years that it took to reach that conclusion and noted that only a fraction of the estimated total of $44 million taken from American consumers could be accounted for. District attorneys and attorneys general in more than a score of states had pursued Koscot.

According to Richard Givens, New York regional director of the F.T.C., the legislation pending in the House would give state and local authorities, as well as Federal prosecutors, the right to obtain injunctions against the prohibited practices.

"We'd be able to use the people who are numerous—the state and local authorities—to enforce Federal standards rather than relying on the much smaller number of Federal enforcement personnel," he said. "This would make for better enforcement and uniformity of enforcement."

Furthermore, consumers who are damaged by someone who knowingly commits a fraud could sue in civil court for triple damages, lawyers' fees and court costs.

The pyramid chain bill, whose primary sponsors are Senator Warren Magnuson, Democrat of Washington, and Senator Frank Moss, Democrat of Utah, passed the Senate in May 1975. It has since been lying dormant, without even a sponsor, in the House Judiciary Committee, whose chairman is Representative Peter Rodino Jr., Democrat of New Jersey.

Persons familiar with the legislation say Mr. Rodino's staff has given the bill a low priority because staff members believe pyramid-chain schemes have practically disappeared.

Neil Offen, vice president and general manager of the Direct Selling Association, which supports the bill, disagrees. "The problem is still there, although not the massive one involving one big company," he said. "Instead you have a myriad of small companies which, in a sense, are harder to control, because there are so many of them."

The Direct Selling Association represents such companies as Avon and Fuller Brush, which, Mr. Offen said, were "often exposed to negative fallout because of pyramid schemes."

The consumer fraud bill, which passed the Senate in July 1975, is awaiting action in the House Subcommittee on Consumer Protection and Finance, whose chairman is Representative Jobo Murphy, Democrat from New York. A spokesman for the committee said hearings on the bill would be held Aug. 9, 10 and 11. But with the fall elections, that will not leave much time for passage before the Congress ends its session at the end of the year. If the House takes no action by that time, the Senate would have to act on the bill again next year.

Service Manuals Held Not Required

Some do-it-yourselfers make a practice of ordering a service manual along with their new refrigerator, air conditioner or other new household device. The idea, of course, is that they can fix it themselves when it breaks down rather than having to call in an expensive repairman.

But as Howard Atlas of Massapequa Park, L.I., reported in a letter, not every manufacturer is willing to give—or even sell—a service manual to a consumer. Mr. Atlas asked whether the manufacturer is obligated by law to sell the manuals.

According to officials of the Federal Trade Commission, the answer is no—there is no law or administrative regulation requiring that service manuals be provided. For that matter, there is no requirement that manufacturers even keep spare parts on hand for a given period of time.

The only law related to this area, the officials said, is the recently enacted Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act that says that if a manufacturer authorizes a third party to perform service under a warranty, that third party must be provided with the means to do that service. Presumably, that would include service manuals and parts.

F.T.C. officials say that the legality of a manufacturer's refusing to give a service manual to a consumer has never been tested.

Experimental Plan For Insurance

Each year, thousands of consumers who have disputes with their auto or homeowners' insurance company find that they can not get their problems resolved by appealing to their state insurance department. The reason may be, for example, that the dispute involves an interpretation of a policy that the department feels can be rendered only by a judge in a court of law.

Most people facing this situation, according to experience in the state of Michigan, just let the matter drop because the cost of going to court is greater than the amount in dispute.

To try to help such people, the National Association of Mutual Insurance Agents has agreed to set up a one-year experimental program that will involve taking such disputes to an independent panel. The five-member panel, was set up under the auspices of Virginia Knauer, Special Assistant to the President for Consumer Affairs, and includes one industry member, a retired independent insurance agent, a representative of the Virginia Consumer Citizens Council and the staff counsel to the United States Senate Commerce Committee, among others.

The program will operate only in Michigan, Mississippi, Montana and Utah. In those four states the insurance commissioners have agreed to refer complaints they can not resolve to the panel. The panel's recommendations will not be legally binding, but the insurance industry will be pressed by the agents' organization to abide by them, according to Mrs. Knauer's office.

WINE TALK

Americans Keep Drinking More and More Wine

By FRANK J. PRIAL. Every year a trade newsletter called Impact pulls together from commercial and government sources some of the pertinent data about wine drinking in the United States. Here are some of the things that Impact has come up with regarding wine in America in 1975.

Consider: Wine entering the market in 1971, 305 million gallons was up more than 14 percent over 1970. The next year the increase was over 10 percent. Then, with the recession, the 1973 increase was only 3 percent and in 1974 it was less than 1 percent, with some fancy figure work.

Impact reports. The market for California wines was up 10 percent last year, from 248 million gallons in 1974 to 273 million. All other states, which means mostly New York, were off 8 percent from Spain and Portugal imports from Italy were up 24 percent last year, from Germany 16 percent and from France 8 percent. The overall figure would have had to be much higher, however, for the imports to hang onto their market share in the growing United States table wine market.

A reasonable price. Inglenook's Navale, Beringer's Los Hermanos and Sebastiani's Sonoma Valley lines all fall in this category.

Yankees Defeat Royals, 7-4, After Losing, 3-1, on 3 Hits

By MURRAY CHASS

The Yankees intensified their seemingly ceaseless war with baseball's hierarchy last night, but they managed only a split in their battle of first-place teams with the Kansas City Royals last night before 35,370 fans.

While the Yankees were firing off-field shots and challenging various rules, the Royals won the opener of the doubleheader, 3-1, as Doug Bird, a sore-shouldered pitcher, and Steve Mingo, a reliever, combined for a three-hitter.

Steve Busby, another sore-shouldered Royal pitcher, allowed only three hits in the second game until the Yankees rallied for five runs in the eighth inning—two on Roy White's bases-loaded single and three on a homer by Chris Chambliss—and won, 7-4.

While all of this was happening, the Yankees surpassed the million mark in attendance, the earliest in a season they've done this since 1961. The fans obviously haven't been coming to Yankee Stadium to witness legal squabbles, but that's what they've been getting—in abundance.

Manager Billy Martin was complaining that the American League office had fouled up his pitching plans because of Catfish Hunter's selection to the All-Star team. Then, during the second game, the Yankees issued a statement in which management, completely with legal opinion, "totally" endorsed Martin's protest of the loss to the Royals on Monday in which Hal McCrae was allowed more than the legal number of warmup throws in the outfield.

There was no word, however, on the Yankee intentions in the Vida Blue case. A high Yankee official said more than two weeks ago that the club would take legal action challenging Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's ruling in the purchase of Blue from the Oakland A's, but no lawsuit has surfaced.

The Yankees seemed to have less at stake in their two new skirmishes than in the Blue battle.

In the All-Star pitching case, Martin said the league had not let him know that Hunter was on the list of starting pitchers being considered for next Tuesday's game and thereby ineligible to pitch on Sunday.

"If I knew he was going to be picked for the game," Martin said, "you can be sure he'd be pitching one of the games [of the doubleheader]. Then he could pitch again Saturday."

Hunter, however, was scheduled to start tonight and therefore won't get another start before the All-Star break.

It turned out, though, that the blame rested not with the league office but with the Yankee front office. The League sent a teletype to all clubs on June 25 and the Yankees acknowledged receipt of the pitching list that included Hunter's name. The problem was that no one in the front office told Martin.

The front office, however, rebounded from the oversight to offer 100 percent support of Martin in his latest protest. This highly unusual move undoubtedly was designed to take some of the pressure off Martin, who has clashed several times with the league office, and to place pressure to uphold the protest on Lee MacPhail, the league president.

"We are not saying that the rule is a good rule," said Joseph Garagiola Jr., the team's house counsel, "but it's a rule in the book. It's very clear, and it's also very

Bellino II, French Entry, Made 8-5 Favorite in International

By SAM GOLDAPER

Pierre Allaire, who parlayed a successful betting career into one of the richest stables in Europe, went back to his old profession yesterday and offered his betting line for Saturday night's $200,000 International Trot at Roosevelt Raceway.

Although the official line of 8-1 was announced for Duke Iron, the Swedish horse who drew the No. 1 post, Allaire disagreed.

"The rail is not going to help the Swedish horse," said Allaire through an interpreter. "He should be 40-1. The horse can't go 1 1/4 miles."

Allaire and the official oddsmaker agreed that Bellino II, the French horse who drew the No. 2 post, should be the favorite. The probable odds for Bellino II, who finished second in the International last year, were set at 8-5. Allaire thought he should be 2-1.

"Bellino hasn't gotten any better," said Allaire, "but he is still a very good horse."

Equileo, the other French entry in the eight-horse field, is co-owned by Allaire and Alain Delon, the motion picture star. Equileo will start from the No. 5 post. His line was set at 8-1, but Allaire cut it to 5-1.

When he was asked why, since Equileo has won only one race in nine starts this year, Allaire said, "Oh, he's been chasing Bellino all year."

When the No. 7 post was awarded to Savoir, the defending champion and one of the two United States entrants, someone said in French, "that's the gullotine for him." An American sitting nearby, agreed. "This could be the finish for Savoir. I hope Mrs. [Helen] Buck retires him before he gets beat."

Savoir, an 8-year-old gelding, has had trouble winning lately. He has finished out of the money in his last three starts and underwent a blood test last Saturday to determine whether he was physically fit. The reports were that he was.

The line for Savoir was set at 5-1, but Allaire made it 7-1.

The Italian entries, Patrolo and Delfo drew the sixth and eighth posts.

"Delfo can win it all if he leaves quickly," said Allaire. "He should not be 20-1; maybe 15-1 or less."

Tells of his Stable

Patrolo's odds were set at 10-1. Allaire made them 8-1.

Meadow Bright, the other American horse, will start from the No. 4 spot at 4-1, and Snegom Flight of Canada from the No. 3 spot. Their probable odds were set at 4-1 and 6-1, respectively. Allaire made Snegom Flight 5-1 and Meadow Bright, 8-1.

Allaire said he was part owner of 80 horses, including Une de Mai, twice a winner of the International. Besides Delon, he said, some of his other partners from show business are Mirelle Darc, an actress, and Michel Sardou, one of France's leading pop singers.

"It used to be that French entertainers would just throw their money away," said Allaire. "It's a new generation. They now want their money working for them and they have gone into trotting. I sell

Mets Waste Chances, Lose, 1-0, in 10th

By PARTON KEESE
Special to The New York Times

HOUSTON, July 6—Leading the Houston Astros by two National League All-Star pitchers to one, the New York Mets looked for one of them, Jon Matlack, to convert the honor into a victory tonight at the Astrodome.

Matlack, who carried a 10-2 won-lost mark to the mound in the second game of this series and led the league in shutouts with four, was named to an eight-man All-Star game pitching staff, as were Tom Seaver of New York and Ken Forsch of the Astros. It will be Matlack's third All-Star stint.

The Astros scored an unearned run in the 10th and won, 1-0. The Mets stranded 15 runners.

Opposing Matlack was James Rodney Richard (7-9), who had yet to lose to the Mets in three decisions. Just as last night's winning hurler, Joe Niekro of Houston did, Richard put Mets on base in each of the first five innings and escaped without damage.

The Mets began promisingly when Bruce Boiesclair singled and John Milner doubled with one out in the first inning. When a pitch to Dave Kingman got away from Skip Jutza, the catcher, Moisesclair tried to score and was thrown out at the plate. Then Kingman struck out.

Milner's hit stretched his consecutive-game batting streak to 12. The Mets' left fielder had a 16-game streak earlier this season.

In the second Felix Millan reached first on a passed-ball strikeout, but was thrown out trying to steal. A single by Bud Harrelson and Mike Phillips' walk was followed by a double play in the third, while Kingman's double, a drive dropped by Cliff Johnson in left, was wasted in the fourth.

In the fifth, a double play again thwarted the Mets after Richard had walked Milan and Harrelson, leading off the inning.

In comparison, Matlack had little trouble keeping the Astros under control. His worst moment came in the first when Enos Cabell's lead off pop fly landed near the right-field line for a double. The Astro third baseman could get no farther than third as Matlack struck out Rob Andrews and induced Cesar Cedeno and Bob Watson to ground out.

The Met left-hander had retired 11 men in a row when Watson's bouncer to short got past Harrelson and Phillips for a single. Another two-out single by Roger

Let Punishment Fit the Crime

Let us agree at the outset that when a designated hitter assigned to play in the outfield takes an illegal number of warmup throws, it is a deadly sin, a crime against nature, a capital offense, an affront to decency and a violation of the laws of God and man.

Hal McCrae of the Kansas City Royals transgressed in this manner in Yankee Stadium Monday, prompting Billy Martin, New York's practically peerless leader, to protest the game. The Royals won, 2-1, and inasmuch as McCrae had no plays of any sort in left field, it didn't matter whether his throwing arm was hot, cold or partially decomposed.

Nevertheless, George M. Steinbrenner, 3d, laird of the Yankee Manor, was on the phone to the American League office yesterday demanding that Lee MacPhail uphold Martin's protest.

Steinbrenner wanted the league president to forfeit the game to New York, or order it replayed, or at least give the Yankees three months, and although you might think he had his fill of lawyers and courtrooms, he said he was having his attorneys look into the legal aspects.

Like Gilbert and Sullivan's Mikado, Lee MacPhail hopes to achieve in time his object all sublime, i.e., to let the punishment fit the crime, the punishment fit the crime. Unfortunately, however, the rule that knits a player in McCrae's situation to five warmup throws does not prescribe a penalty for evil-doers.

There is no question about McCrae's depravity. Steinbrenner can produce 26,011 eyewitnesses to testify that when the outfielder had exchanged five throws with Al Cowens in center field, Lou Di Muro, umpire, told him he had taken his limit and must cease, desist, leave off, belay. Brazenly and feloniously, McCrae took a sixth, seventh and eighth throw, bringing Martin out of the dugout in defense of clean sport and the American national pastime.

The importance of this safeguard was demonstrated last year. Barring against five pitchers who were fully rested, the Nationals were held to 13 hits and six runs as they ambled to their 12th victory in the last 13 exhibitions. In spite of that evidence, Martin considers it more important for the Yankees to get full service out of Hunter than to have him ready to face Joe Morgan, Johnny Bench and those guys.

Billy says suppose Hunter missed a turn with the Yankees on account of the All-Star Game, and the Yankees finished the season one victory out of first place. "It's wrong, it's ridiculous," he said Monday. "I haven't been told yet who not to use on Sunday, but I don't care about the All-Star Game that much."

He has a point, but not a very good one. In the first place, notice not to use Hunter on Sunday went to the Yankees June 25 and they acknowledged receipt of the order. That gave Martin two and a half weeks to arrange the rotation so Hunter could work against the White Sox Saturday night instead of Sunday. Inasmuch as Hunter had been a member of seven All-Star teams, Billy might have suspected that he would be chosen again.

"Dream Game"

Outside of that, Martin's attitude toward the All-Star Game is sound. It is an exhibition that means nothing. It does not prove one league superior to the other, it doesn't count in the standings, it is a boring interruption of the championship season made especially unappetizing by blatant commercialism.

Winning is important only to the league presidents, and although any manager would prefer to show himself smarter than his adversary, the rules of the exhibition do not permit him to use his personnel to best advantage. Win or lose, he is expected to put as many players on display as possible. Last year, for example, Alvin Dark used 22 American Leaguers and Walter Alston 23 Nationals.

Without genuine competition, baseball is nothing. It is not competition when the rules forbid working a pitcher more than three innings even if he is throwing a no-hitter. It isn't a real ball game at all; it is just what its creator, Arch Ward, called it in the beginning, a "dream game."

Arch was sports editor of The Chicago Tribune and he talked baseball's owners into putting on an exhibition in 1933 in connection with the Chicago Fair, called a Century of Progress, as a circulation promotion stunt for his paper. It was his notion that an opportunity to see players like Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Al Simmons, Joe Cronin, Charley Gehring and Lefty Grove against Frank Frisch, Paul Waner, Bill Terry, Pie Traynor, Gabby Hartnett and Carl Hubbell would be a fan's dream come true. Maybe Arch was right, but not all dreams are good dreams.

Therefore it devolves upon MacPhail to put on the black cap and pronounce judgment on the culprit. A suitable sentence, it says here, would be a one-dollar fine for each throw in excess of five; this would come to three dollars. Then, in view of the fact that the villainously warmed-up outfielder had in no way affected the score, sentence could be suspended. Lee would not be the first president to show clemency to an offender.

There is another area in which Manager Martin and President MacPhail do not see eye to eye. In the hope that some day, somehow, the American League might win an All-Star Game, it has been ordered that pitchers chosen to oppose the National League must get at least two full days of rest before the annual encounter. Thus Catfish Hunter, whom Darrell Johnson has included on his staff for next Tuesday's All-Star Game in Philadelphia, is not eligible to pitch next Sunday against the White Sox.

Haden 2-Way Man: Oxford U. and Rams

Pat Haden, the quarterback and Rhodes scholar from the University of Southern California, signed three one-year contracts to play for the Los Angeles Rams yesterday.

There will be a surprise. Tomik Rifat, a 21-year-old striker for the team, is an Arab. He was born in Jaffa and plays for Hapoel Tel Aviv.

Rod Laver excused himself again from World Team Tennis play with San Diego, citing business and personal reasons and forcing the Friar coach, Cliff Drysdale, into action.

Haden will begin as the Rams' No. 3 quarterback behind James Harris and Ron Jaworski.

Dreyfus Leads Ike Tourney on 66 at Wyk

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr. Special to The New York Times NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., July 6—John Dreyfus tied a tournament record and missed a course record by one shot today as he scored 30, 36-66, or six under par, at Wykagyl in the first round of the 24th annual Ike amateur tourney.

In the first round of the 54-hole tournament, Benison, a 20-year-old sophomore at American University, came in with 40, 37-77 so that Century won the team crown at a one-under-par total of 143.

The competitive course record is 64 and is held by four professionals—Lloyd Mangrum, Cary Middlecott, Sam Snead and Craig Wood—who scored those rounds a quarter century ago when the Palm Beach round-robin tourney was an annual fixture at Wykagyl.

Dreyfus led the field in the individual competition, which will be decided tomorrow with 36 holes of play over the 6,570-yard course at Wykagyl. But he had only a two-stroke advantage over Bob Housen of Lakewood, the 1975 New Jersey amateur champion. Housen shot 33, 45-68 in hot weather at this Spring in the locker room and the mood: but there is no such respite here, not even a shower.

Weiskopf's practice round today was 30, 35-65, with four birdies on the front side and three on the back nine, and no bogeys. He missed only two greens, and even so he had birdied.

Even though drives are rolling farther, there are many traps waiting. Also, one unlucky bounce off these mounds and dunes will kick a ball into the rough, and this is the hardest rough there is.

"You don't have to play badly to shoot 74 or 75 here," Weiskopf said. "Just a couple of bad bounces into the rough, and you've had it."

"And I'm telling you this rough is tough. There are places three to six feet from the green where the rough is so deep you can't hack it out to the green in one shot."

Track Tightens Belt

LINCOLN, R. I., July 6 (AP)—Officials at Lincoln Downs are dropping perfecta and trifecta betting and cutting purses from a daily average of $26,000 to $19,000 in an effort to keep thoroughbred racing going.
Lewis Rinebolt, the track auditor, said that elimination of multiple forms of betting will save the track more than $1,000 daily in salaries paid to union mutual clerks.
"As a rough guess, the eliminating of perfecta and trifecta wagering probably will result in 30 clerks being laid off," Rinebolt said. "In addition, we also will save in the area of bonus payments to the clerks."
"There were a lot of reasons why the board of directors voted to take this action," Rinebolt said. "In the first place, our per capita betting average is lagging and we feel the multiple forms of betting haven't helped. Then, too, many of the horsemen were not in favor of all the gimmicks races."

think he may have mentioned he wanted to sit down and talk," Boe said. "His agent isn't bashful about asking for more money, I'll tell you that."

Boe said his team was in the market for players, but that any decision would await the outcome of the dispersal draft of unattached A.B.A. players later this month. "There are 10 or 12 players in the draft who'd be willing to pay the price for," he said. The Nets pick 19th among the 22 teams in the combined league.

Boe said free agents, unsigned draft choices and the like would be invited to the Nets training camp beginning Sept. 23. "We might bring in 50 guys up there," he said. The club president said it would take "a number of years, many years" to recover the investment necessary to join the N.B.A. "Denver thinks they can do it in two or three years," he said. "I think four or five years might be more realistic for us."

Ailing Pele Will Miss Game Against Metros Tonight

By ALEX YANNIS
Pele didn't go with the New York Cosmos to Toronto yesterday and will not play against the Metros tonight. The Brazilian remained in New York for treatment and rest of the groin pull he suffered against the St. Louis Stars last Friday night at Yankee Stadium.
"If tomorrow's was a championship game," Clive Toye, the president of the Cosmos, said yesterday, "Pele would play. But there are still a lot of games left in the league and we need him." Toye added that Pele would probably play against the Atoms in Philadelphia on Saturday night.
In place of Pele the Cosmos may use Ramon Mifflin, who took Pele's place with 14 minutes left against St. Louis and scored twice in the 3-1 victory. Mifflin was Pele's teammate at Santos and the star of the team after Pele's departure, but he has been sitting on the bench with the Cosmos.
Bobby Smith, the Cosmos' right fullback, is also questionable for the game tonight because of a leg injury he suffered during scrimmage on Monday. The Cosmos have plenty of defenders to replace Smith, if he is unable to play.

The customary news conference the Cosmos have the day before road games, was handled by Giorgio Chinaglia, Keith Eddy and Shep Messing, along with Gordon Bradley, the coach. Bradley is the more experienced in that department.
Tonight's game will be played at Varsity Stadium and not the regular home field of the Metros, which holds only about 10,000. The refurbished Varsity Stadium seats about 25,000 and will be used for soccer during the Olympic Games.

While Chinaglia has been dormant so far as scoring goes in recent games, Pele has lost the lead in the league race. The Brazilian is now second to Derek Smethurst of the Tampa Bay Rowdies. Smethurst, who will be at Yankee Stadium against the Cosmos next Wednesday night, has 24 points to Pele's 23.
Despite tornado warnings on Sunday, the Dallas Tornado attracted the largest crowd to see an N.A.S.L. game in Texas. The 20,418 fans also saw both teams wearing Tornado uniforms because the Vancouver Whitecaps, who won 2-1, in overtime, had to borrow a set from the Tornado when theirs failed to arrive.

City Man, Wilderness Man

By RICHARD R. LINGEMAN

RED WOLVES & BLACK BEARS. By Edward Hoagland. 273 pages. New York: Random House $8.95.

It takes a lot of gall to be an optimist these days. Of course there are always the professional cheerers-uppers, vending bottled sunshine, as well as the various official optimisms aboard. But most of us have heard it all before too many times and so we hoard in secret our private stocks of life-sustaining provisions.

With its connotations of Chamber of Commerce boosterism, optimism is perhaps a bad word to apply to Edward Hoagland; make it skeptical optimism or, better, yes-sayer, life-affirmer. "Life is good," he writes in the first of the 19 essays collected in "Red Wolves & Black Bears," citing the joy of animals. Evolution, he says, "has been a matter of days well-lived, chameleon strength, energy, zappy sex, sunshine stored up, inventiveness, competitiveness, and the whole fun of busy brain cells." This is not fatuousness speaking for in the course of his ramble in town and country, he records vividly the innocent savagery of animal to animal, the indifferent cruelty of man to endangered species such as the Texas red wolves of the title and man's inhumanity to his own kind. Visits to some preserved ante-bellum mansions in the South, set him wondering why, among all the lovingly preserved bibelots, the preservers did not include a whip, and that moves him into an account of the routine cruelty of slavery. A naturalist of the human species, he concludes with an observation of a contemporary petty tyrant working his arbitrary will on his black employees and has a sense of the master side of the slave relationship; the sight of an old black man hitchhiking and employing subject Uncle Tom behavior by the side of the road suggests the legacy of Oppression.

Mind Rambles Far Afield

Mr. Hoagland's essayistic mind rambles with the effortless and seemingly unplanned grace of a retriever working a field for quail. In his nature essays he brings back a heavy bag of facts; like Thoreau, he has an abiding respect for the fact. This reflects a natural scientific curiosity and also a reveling in the uniqueness of the different species. This joy spills over into his contemplation of the human animal: "there is no accounting for individuality," he exults. Circus people, like the 70-year-old "low-water man" who dives from a 40-foot ladder into a 12-foot pool of water enchant him, as does the behavior of a rabbit setting "scenting puzzles for the terrier behind him," or the wolf gaily squirting a urinary Kilroy was here on his territory.

In his longer essays on bears and red wolves, he gets close to the obsessed breed of amateur scientists who study them. Meo like Lynn Rogers, who plants radios on bears and records their forays, Mr. Rogers loves his work and Mr. Hoagland senses that he is living a boyhood dream—one he had, too, that made him climb cliffs in search of caves where there might be animals—"to track and sneak close to, capture and fondle a noisy, goofy, gassy, hairy, dirty, monstrous, bot, stout, incontrovertible bear."

Yet while seeking the incontrovertible bear, the quiddities of animal behavior, his mind, at another level, is triggered to soar into visions. Watching turkey buzzards, at the moment the sun breaks through after a night of rain, he sees the great, ungainly birds spread their wings all at once, not to fly but simply to dry them. A disorderly, yet interrelated tumult of associations follows. He is reminded of a totem pole crowned by a raven—a scavenger like the buzzards—its wings outstretched, representing the Creator to the Indians. He thinks of the Indian carver of the totem pole and of how the sight of those buzzards embracing the horizon would have provided him with "a whole life's ozone.... Fifteen images of the Creator in a rising sun would have propelled a great chief into his manhood after walking naked for a month; except we have no divine signs now."

A Love for Natural Things

The anticlimax of the last sentence brings us down to earth—our own ravaged, polluted earth of Texas housing tracts without trees that have "forest" in the pizazz sobriquets real estate speculators have given them. Mr. Hoagland, it hardly needs to be said, is a conservationist with a love for natural things. With the current vogue for ecology, he says that editors call him up and offer him a good wage to hop into his car and drive and report on some beleaguered vestigial wilderness. And he usually takes them up on it, though in his writing he avoids heavy-handed propaganda or faux-naif manderings. He is skeptical of wolf experts who present the wolf as a wrooked innocent who performs euthanasia on aging caribou. On the contrary, their raids on the pioneers' small herds of cows signaled a life-and-death struggle fought with guns, traps and snares.

Like Thoreau, who went home to Concord on weekends, Mr. Hoagland lives in the city (New York City) and in his last essay he is sitting on a pier along the Hudson, thinking of the death of cities and of the porcupine he necessarily shot. The latter memory he finds augmentive: man and animal moving to primal patterns—the permanence in things. In wilderness is that basal permanence, he decides, "an infinity of particulars which are changing only very slowly, without special reference to man." The rich, surprising variety to all things—their otherness—is what truly matters. "We forget," he writes, "what miracles we are." When Mr. Hoagland is driving in his car to another wilderness assignment, he sometimes finds himself singing at the top of his lungs. "God is good! God is great!" Readers of this book may find themselves, to their surprise, wanting to sing along.

"One of the most fearsome characters ever created in a novel."
*The Great Santini is Lt. Col. Bull Meecham, a Marine fighter pilot... The novel is haunted by a genuine feeling of menace, of love hanging by a fragile string, and of futility. But always present is what Conroy knows to be the strongest emotion of all — hope. It is his sensitive understanding of these feelings that makes The Great Santini an impressive novel.

THE LARDNERS

My Family Remembered
BY Ring Lardner, Jr.

"Besides producing a body of work that is possibly the best writing about America since Life on the Mississippi, in a voice that contains a continent... Ring Lardner, Sr., produced four first-rate children... I'd suggest there are worse ways of writing away the Bicentennial than reading about these quintessential Americans in their own special language, the Lardner family style."
—Wilfrid Speed, front-page review, N.Y. Times Book Review

Jean Stafford: "We are given a picture of an enviably happy and cohesive family, scarcely affected—if, indeed, at all—by the melancholy and the spree-drinking of the paterfamilias."
—Esquire

"The portraits of Lardner's brothers' spirited lives and early deaths; Ring, Jr.'s own struggle with the congressional witch-hunters who sent him to prison; and, above all, the description of his father's terrible battle against alcoholism are not things any reader will soon forget."

Multinational Code

The free flow across borders of capital investment along with international trade in the three decades after World War II helped spark the most phenomenal growth that the world economy has ever recorded.

The developing countries, breaking away from colonial rule, have often eyed foreign capital suspiciously. But within the developed world, where 80 percent of the capital movement has occurred, the general presumption has been that incomes are increased all around by letting investment flow where returns are greatest.

This thesis now is coming under increasing challenge. Bribery and corruption across borders involving some of the world's best known multinational companies have begun to erode confidence in an open investment climate. Earlier, pressure for investment controls had been stimulated by fears, now shown to be exaggerated, of massive direct investment by the oil-rich countries.

This thesis now is coming under increasing challenge. Bribery and corruption across borders involving some of the world's best known multinational companies have begun to erode confidence in an open investment climate. Earlier, pressure for investment controls had been stimulated by fears, now shown to be exaggerated, of massive direct investment by the oil-rich countries.

Growing concerns about environmental safety, health and social policy have also led to closer scrutiny of the behavior of multinational enterprises. Incoming American investment, once welcomed as the conveyor belt for high technology and rapid growth, is now sometimes seen as unwelcome competition, particularly during a recession. Foreign dominance of key industries, difficult to integrate into national plans, is increasingly feared. Conversely, trade unionists in the United States and Western Europe have begun to look upon the outflow of capital as the export of jobs.

The net effect has been growing support for the concept that governments should selectively encourage or restrict some kinds of outgoing investment and other kinds of incoming investment. There has been no structure of international rules and agreements for investment of the kind that for 30 years has safeguarded trade from a return to protectionism and "beggar-my-neighbor" policies. No GATT for investment has existed because, until recently, the general commitment to free flow of capital has made it unnecessary.

An attempt to create such a structure—comprising reciprocal codes of behavior for companies and governments in an open system of capital flows—is now being undertaken by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development after an 18-month negotiation.

A compact agreed on recently by the foreign and financial ministers of some two dozen industrial countries lays down reasonable standards of business practice for companies voluntarily to follow. Governments, in return, have committed themselves to non-discriminatory treatment of foreign-controlled enterprises and the use of international mechanisms to settle disputes.

The new system will not restore confidence overnight in the probity of the multinational giants nor easily revive the belief that their search for profit automatically advances the general welfare. But the reaffirmation by the industrial countries of their commitment to a liberal investment regime should reverse the recent double trend toward investment restrictions and a drying up of capital flows, a trend that has been threatening to undermine a vital element in world economic growth.

Olympian Politics

Politics and the Olympic games have been all too frequently intertwined for many years, and each time the cause of sports has suffered. This is true whether one recalls Hitler's shameful attitude toward black athletes when the Olympic games were played in Nazi Germany in the mid-1930's or, more recently, the disgraceful decision of the International Olympic Committee—acting under Soviet pressure—early this year to ban Radio Free Europe reporters from the winter Olympics.

Now, however, it is the committee that is defending the principle of maximum freedom for all athletes to compete and, surprisingly, Canada that is taking an uncharacteristically illiberal position. When the 1976 summer games were awarded to Montreal, according to the International Olympic Committee, the Canadian Government agreed to receive and give full and equal freedom to all teams from all countries whose Olympic committees are recognized by the I.O.C.

But now Canada—obviously acting under heavy pressure from Peking—has moved to block the participation of athletes from Taiwan so long as they call themselves representatives of the Republic of China. Essentially the Canadians are demanding that the Taiwanese team compete as Taiwanese and that their present political affiliation be—if not denied—ignored.

The Olympics would be turned into a shambles if the principle of political discrimination were to be legitimized. Just in the last few days, some African countries have demanded that New Zealand be barred from the Olympics because a New Zealand rugby team recently toured South Africa. In the present dispute, the athletes from Taiwan have the support of a large part of the sports world not out of political sympathy but because everyone concerned fully realizes the stifling effect politicization of the Olympics would have.

Prime Minister Trudeau would be well advised to reconsider his apparent willingness to cave in to Peking's demand that the Olympics be subservient to international politics.

When Rights Collide

The omnipresence of television cameras in American life has led to a new set of legal problems in the area of access and trespass that could hardly have been foreseen in the centuries-old evolution of the common law. Aggressive producers and cameramen at times view their activities as above any other constitutional rights, such as the right to privacy, in the pursuit of their pictures.

The most recent example to reach the courts involves a television station and a New York restaurant, which had earlier been cited for unsanitary conditions by the Board of Health. After the violation had been corrected, a TV crew entered the restaurant at lunchtime in July, 1972, and filmed the patrons over the proprietor's objections. The footage was subsequently shown on television. A jury verdict in the New York State Supreme Court awarded the restaurant $250,000 in punitive damages against the TV network. Apart from factual matters involving such questions as whether or not the TV crew left when requested—after it had already filmed indoors without permission—the case pits the right of reportage against the right of privacy. The judge in the case ruled that "the right to publish [broadcast] does not include the right to enter upon or trespass upon the property. . . . The jury's verdict is being appealed.

Access and trespass in the hot pursuit of news may, on occasion inevitably violate the right of privacy. However, it is the cumulative effect of these incursions that has troubled many persons, including those involved in seeking and reporting the news.

In the tradition of justice and the balance of interests, each case must be considered on its own merits. New technologies and greater awareness of both public and individual rights will inevitably lead to increasing challenges in the courts. But changed conditions of news-gathering also place an added burden on the media to balance their responsibility to inform with a heightened respect for privacy.

Tarnished Councilman

The city's Corporation Counsel has ruled that Matthew J. Troy Jr.'s admission of guilt to one of three charges involving false income tax returns does not automatically bar him from retaining his City Council seat.

That judgment may be technically correct. But a decent respect for his constituents, for the Council and for the already sadly tarnished image of New York politics should impel the compromised councilman to step down voluntarily rather than await the verdict of the voters next year.

At the very least, the former Queens Democratic leader should immediately relinquish his powerful position as chairman of the Council's Finance Committee. New York has enough troubles without being subjected to oer questions about the integrity of any official who has a hand—however indirectly—in guiding its fiscal affairs.

Spendthrift Landlord

When a city is forced by financial pressure to dismiss tens of thousands of employees, it ought to be considered a matter of humane as much as of economic policy to eliminate every budgetary dollar that is wastefully spent. A report by Manhattan Councilman-at-large Robert F. Wagner Jr. suggests that unconscionable amounts—over $150 million annually—are spent for unnecessarily leased office space.

Unless drastic changes, including renegotiation of existing leases, are instituted, the current commitments will cost the city more than $1 billion in rent payments over the next 20 years. That estimate does not include the considerable cost to the city for heat, lighting, custodial care and real estate taxes.

This is not to suggest that the city can get along without rented space. Some leased facilities obviously constitute a prudent use of city funds. But the Wagner report provides ample evidence that prudence has not guided the city's leasing practices. The study makes these telling points:

• Although the number of city employees has declined by 45,000 during the past year, there has been no appreciable decline in the amount of leased space, while many city-owned facilities are underutilized.

• Nobody in the city administration could provide a list of all leases signed by the city, or provide an exact figure of the amount paid annually for such purposes.

• Many leases are held by major political contributors to the present administration—a potential for corruption which has been eliminated by means of specific legislation in many other cities as well as within the Federal Government.

While $6.50 per square foot has been considered as reasonable by the Commissioner of Real Estate, the city pays in excess of $14 for some of its rented space. One facility on Mott Street, bought by its present owners for $25,000 in 1971, was leased by the city for use as a day-care center in 1973 at an annual cost of $98,560. One year later, the city agreed to increase its rental payment to $147,840 per annum. At that rate, the Wagner report points out, the city pays the landlord in a single year six times the amount he paid for the building.

Even if such horror stories may be exceptional, there is no doubt that extensive long-range reforms recommended by Mr. Wagner are needed. They should be preceded by a complete inventory and utilization study by a responsible outside group. This city cannot afford to continue its old ways as a spendthrift landlord.

The Small Apple

Scarcely an observer, commentator or participant has not remarked the congeniality of New York's Bicentennial celebration. Wherever one went in the city over the July Fourth weekend, the people—the crowds—were friendly, patient, good-spirited, mutually helpful.

From the extraordinarily well-regulated and innovative nighttime parade up the Avenue of the Americas to the vast sea of humanity that swept down to the shore of Battery Park for Op Sail and fireworks, there seemed not a time when push came to shove. Was it the occasion itself that put people on their best behavior; or was it the enormous number of visitors by land and by sea that diluted native passions?

Whatever it was, the big city worked like a small town. More to the point, the people worked—and even mass transit had its day, perhaps its finest hour. In the exhilaration of the holiday, New Yorkers were able to turn for a moment from civic tribulation to Bicentennial celebration; and it was a pleasant experience.

Letters to the Editor

C.I.A.: Fidel Castro's Helpers

To the Editor:

One of the favorite arguments of the Latin-American left is that the development of the Southern Hemisphere is impossible because of the stifling incubus of North American power.

An Ecuadorian politician once observed, quite confidentially, that the gringos controlled everything in his country, even the traffic lights. In "One Hundred Years of Solitude," the most widely read novel in Latin America, Gabriel Garcia Marquez alleges that the Americans control the weather. What audacity! What a tragedy this "cretinismo" and paranoia which afflict Latin America's underdeveloped intellectuals!

But wait, C.I.A. to the rescue. This weekend, as President Ford was lecturing Fidel Castro against political interventionism, a former Defense Department researcher revealed that the United States has been waging a secret weather war against Cuba, trying to topple the Castro regime by artificially stimulating a drought in order to wreck the island's agricultural economy.

Fortunately, this weather war, like so many of the agency's brilliant and well-publicized ploys against Cuba, was apparently a complete failure. Indeed, one wonders whether the agency and the supporters of clandestine operations in the White House and the Congress have managed to achieve precisely the obverse of that intended. By creating a constant aura of threats to Cuba's security, the U.S. has provided Castro with the environment necessary for the rationalization of his police state. The agency may well be the best friend Castro ever had.

One suspects that the greatest impact of the agency's dirty tricks has been felt, not abroad, but rather within the United States. Each new revelation of the agency's derring-do is a new stroke in a portrait of an America without honor, a country capable of the shabbiest kind of behavior. The partisans of realpolitik have run amuck. They are force-feeding a new and isolationist generation of young Americans, a generation steeped in cynicism and disillusionment about our activities overseas.

Of course, there are some sentinels of liberty who have warned against policies which cause the sapping of the national spirit. Henry Kissinger is one of them. But then, was he not also director of the National Security Council when the weather war was launched against Cuba?

Raindrops in the Park

To the Editor:

Joe Papp, Bernie Gersten and their associates at the Shakespeare Festival laid before us a sumptuous evening when "Henry V" opened in the park last Monday night: as always, a fresh and imaginative stage set; as always, luscious costumes and charming music; as always, some very fine acting, and the glorious words. On top of that we had been treated to a delightful picnic supper before the play.

It was therefore all the more disappointing that so many members of the audience, when a few tentative drops of rain began to fall, scuttled out of their seats, with much noisy bumping and shuffling. That they did so in the very middle of the St. Crispin's speech

From this day to the ending of the world
But we in it shall be remembered—
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers . . .

seemed especially ungracious. It always rains on opening night of Shakespeare in the Park. It then always stops, in time for the radiant finale. The cast was most generously willing to play on. One expected that the audience—New Yorkers who usually see things through—would have offered encouragement and shown appreciation by staying put.

Sex Education and the Legislature

To the Editor:

On June 27, The Times reported that the Assembly had passed a bill to allow parents to keep their children out of sex education classes. How irrational and cynical of our State Legislature to add insult to injury after recently passing a bill requiring parental consent for abortion.

That bill, which fortunately the Governor vetoed, would have risked the health of the teen-ager who might delay seeking medical help because of first having to obtain parental consent. The Legislature would now increase the number of teen-agers needing abortions by allowing parents to deny young people information about methods of contraception.

Pregnancy among teen-agers in New York State is a health problem of epidemic proportions. In 1974, 64,000 in this state became pregnant; half of them had abortions. The pregnancy rate of sub-teen-agers and teen-agers increased by 25.5 per cent between 1971 and 1974. This statistic is compelling by itself but even more so in relation to the declining pregnancy rate in the state for every other age group twenty and over. One would hope our state legislators would pass legislation to make sex information and related health care easily obtainable so that teen-agers are able to make responsible decisions to protect their health, quality of life and economic future as well as that of their families and society.

Sex education does not focus only on contraception. It provides a framework for understanding oneself as a sexual being and thus can strengthen a young person's decision not to be prematurely sexually active. Research indicates that teen-agers do not receive sex education from their parents. Instead they receive information and misinformation from peers. This bill would constitute another roadblock to the teen-ager who needs and responsibly seeks information.

If parents don't discuss and schools don't provide sex education, communities will have to cope with the consequences of an increasing rate of unwarranted pregnancy, particularly among the very young.

It seems unfortunate that the rational citizens of the state must depend upon the Governor to fend off irresponsible legislation rather than look to the Legislature as the leader of sound and humane public policy.

American Power and Foreign Policy

By Joseph S. Nye Jr.

The great debate on foreign policy this election year has focused almost entirely on the Soviet-American military balance. Yet Americans will increasingly face a new type of foreign policy issue: National security can be endangered by events outside the traditional military sphere.

A melting of the Arctic ice cap because of a three-degree rise in the earth's temperature, depletion of the earth's ozone layer, theft of plutonium by terrorist groups, ill-fated experiments with weather modification, a prolonged world population explosion—all these could threaten our future as seriously as many occurrences that could arise in the traditional political-military realm.

Moreover, the debate over the alleged decline of American military power tells us little about our future ability to control these new issues.

Power has always been an elusive concept in international affairs. Now the nature of the resources that produce power capabilities has become more complex, and the international power hierarchy more difficult to determine. When a good infantry was the crucial power resource, European statesmen could calibrate the classical balance of power by counting the populations of conquered and transferred territories. The Industrial Revolution complicated such calculations, and nuclear weapons, as a power resource too costly to use except in an extreme situation, further weakened the relationship between power measured in military resources and power in the sense of control over the outcome of events.

This is not to say that military force has become obsolete. Quite the contrary. Military deterrence will remain a central concern of our foreign policy. But military force is difficult to apply to many of the new interdependence issues on the agenda.

The use of force is made more costly for major states by four conditions: risks of nuclear escalation; uncertain and possible negative effects on the achievement of economic goals; resistance by nationalistic populations in otherwise weak states; domestic opinion opposed to the human costs of the use of force.

Even those states relatively unaffected by the third and fourth conditions, such as Communist countries, may feel some constraints from the first two. On the other hand, lesser states involved in regional rivalries, and terrorist groups, may find it easier to use force than before. The net effect of these contrary changes in the role of force is to reduce hierarchy based on military power.

The erosion of the international hierarchy is sometimes portrayed as a decline of American power—as though the causes lay in our aging process. Admittedly, from the perspective of a policymaker of the 1950's there has been a decline. But American power in the sense of resources has not declined as dramatically as is often supposed. United States military spending was roughly a third of the world total in 1950, and after rising to slightly over half in the 1950's has returned to the earlier level.

Over the same period, the American gross national product declined from roughly a third to a quarter of the world total, but the earlier figure reflected the wartime destruction of Europe and Japan, and the current figure remains twice the size of that of the Soviet Union, three times that of Japan, and four times that of West Germany.

To understand what is changing, we must distinguish power over others from power over outcomes. What we are experiencing is not so much an erosion of our power resources compared to those of other countries (although there has been some), but an erosion of our power to control outcomes in the international system as a whole.

The main reason is that the system itself has become more complex. There are more issues, more actors, and less hierarchy. We still have leverage over others, but we have far less leverage over the whole system.

Increased military spending will not be sufficient to solve this problem. In such a world, multilateral diplomacy, often through international institutions will become more important because much of the agenda will be concerned with organizing collective action.

Our foreign policy debate should pay more attention to the problem of organizing international leadership where there is a tight interconnection between domestic and foreign policy, and we will need to think more imaginatively about the relations of our institutions to international institutions.

The Lesson of Entebbe

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS—The difference between terrorism and generalized war is essentially one of degree since both conform to Clausewitz's definition—"an act of violence intended to compel our opponent to fulfill our will."

Terrorism generally refers to small movements rather than to nations. It frequently aims at political or social factions rather than governments as such. Nonetheless, the various Arab terrorist groups have in common the target of Israel as a state even though they often approach that target by different means.

Moreover, terrorism often produces a threat of war and, at times, actual conflict, as when it ignited World War I. It is interesting to recall the testimony of young Gavrilo Princip in 1914 after he had assassinated the Hapsburg heir, Archduke Franz Ferdinand, in Sarajevo.

tions in dictatorial states like Chile and Argentina have not successfully cured the problem.

One is forced to consider the wisdom of national governments preparing some kind of small, effective, mobile force to be used in counterterrorist moves as the Israelis used special troops to terminate Arab terrorist blackmail from Uganda. For example, what will be done if and when terrorists try to paralyze a nation's policy with a captured nuclear warhead?

France maintains such a force, rarely advertised, called the "Force d'Intervention." Its small forward element is based by bilateral treaty in Seogel, its larger rear elements are based in southwest France.

The idea is that if something considered harmful to French national in-

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

"I am a South Slav nationalist," he told the court. "My aim is the union of all South Slavs, under whatever political regime, and their liberation from Austria."

"By what means did you think to accomplish that?" he was asked by the judge. He replied: "By terrorism."

Princip and his colleagues were not working by themselves or unaided by external factors. They were teleguided, armed and prepared by the Serbian kingdom's chief of military intelligence, Col. "Apis" Dimitrijevic, and there is evidence that Apis in turn was furnished funds by Russia's military attaché in Belgrade.

terests is touched off by terrorists in Francophone Africa, the force intervenes. It has done so already, without much fuss.

Should the United States or other countries create a select, disciplined antiterrorist unit capable of dealing with political blackmail? If not, there will always be greater chance that, abetted by modern devices, other "acts of violence" may be staged—by a group, a gang, out a state—to "compel" fulfillment of its will. Such a unit would be too small to threaten a state—only a political movement. It would be designed for legal reaction, not military initiative.

When one contemplates the case for and against terrorism today one often sees hints of similar foreign aid for people willing to kill or be killed for particular causes. There is little doubt that Libya's President, Colonel Qaddafi (to name but one) is more than a silent offstage noise with respect to a wide spectrum of terrorist movements from North Ireland to the southern Philippines, but concentrating against Israel. I can think of no historical precursor to Uganda's blundering President Idi Amin.

I would like to add an unpleasant footnote. All my life I have opposed capital punishment. I thought it wrong of the Israelis to execute Eichmann; it would have been wrong for them to execute Hitler, had they been able to catch him alive.

But it is even more wrong to condemn unknown innocents to the risk of kidnapping or murder merely to serve as pawns in a blackmail game designed to gain the release of legally convicted, imprisoned terrorists. That alone was the purpose of the hijackers of France's Airbus.

Until the brilliant Israeli coup at Entebbe, which succeeded in negating the terrorists' blackmail leverage and also in punishing them severely, there have been few novel attempts to deal with modern aspects of the problem. In the past only formal war or gunboat diplomacy were the usual answers. This has become increasingly a question of menacing a goat with a sledge hammer. Police opera-

Is it not time for all free nations to agree that they will make exceptions to their penal codes permitting the execution of condemned terrorists so that innocent people will not henceforth be similarly condemned, as were the Airbus passengers, simply by existing? This only invites kidnapers to seize them as hostages, regardless of who they are. Every live convicted terrorist in prison increases the chance of dead innocents abroad.

The New Moralism

By Fred M. Hechinger

The highly publicized sexual revolution of the 1960's was supposed to have turned the United States into a swinging oasis of broadmindedness. Gone were the Puritan pruderies that had for so long set strict standards of behavior, or at least of appearance, for public personalities. Even politicians were no longer being banished for disclosures of infidelity.

Now, it seems, moralism (as emphatically distinct from morality) has risen again from its brief coma. The "new morality" has been replaced by the old, rearing its busy head wherever one looks, from Capitol Hill to the Kings Point Merchant Marine Academy.

Who would have thought, in the liberated 60's, that the charge of having negotiated with a prostitute might threaten a Congressman's political career, or that a coed-in-uniform would find herself—but not her male partner—expelled for cohabitation? Or that an irate father would undertake a public campaign against the presence of men in the residence halls of the woman's college his daughter attends?

Such concerns had last been heard in 1968, when it was discovered that a Barnard student had set up housekeeping with a boyfriend in an off-campus apartment. After a last-half-hearted attempt to uphold the old morality, the college administration decided to let sleeping coeds lie. In the years that followed, public concern about people's private lives seemed at low key. On the whole, the turn away from the old prying Puritanism was a welcome change and, one dared hope, a break with hypocrisy rather than with basic morality.

Those were apparently false hopes. The present wallowing in the so-called sex scandals suggests strongly that a prudish counter-revolution has all but routed the sexual revolution. While it can be persuasively argued that some radical opportunists drove the liberation movement to occasional excess, a new set of opportunists seems to be turning the new moralism into an instrument of political persecution, with an alarming potential for blackmail.

This is not to say that the revelations about Representative Wayne Hays and Elizabeth Ray did not serve a legitimate purpose. The powerful Congressman's publicly financed sexual indiscretions were, by all accounts, relatively minor offenses when compared to his record of arrogant disregard of non-sex-related violations of his high office. There is nothing new in convicting a public man on the basis of lesser, but more easily provable, offenses. It is, after all, in the American tradition of "getting" an Al Capone or a Spiro Agnew on messy income tax evasion. It may even "save" the taxpayer the money of lengthy litigation and serve the same ultimate purpose of getting the rascal out of the way, or at least out of power.

But this is different from the sudden zeal to ferret-out sexual indiscretions on the part of past and present politicians, with the unmistakable implication that they ought to be held publicly accountable for their private lives. It can, of course, be argued that a politician who uses women "like Kleener" (as the current idiom puts it) should not be trusted. This may be true, but why concentrate on conspicuous sexual consumption? As long as the relationships at issue are between consenting adults (and there has been no indication of lacking consent on the part of the women in these relationships) they seem far less pertinent in judging a public figure than the way he "uses" political supporters, staff aides and—first and foremost—the American people.

It is one thing to adhere to strict standards of morality in one's personal life. It is quite another to insist that a Congressman's sexual morality should be a matter of concern for anyone but him and his wife, and the local laws that govern such conduct. His wife has the option to expel him from bed and board, but her interpretation of the marriage contract is not the business of any governmental ethics committee. The local law-enforcement agencies may impose the appropriate penalties, but does it not smack of a double standard if a Congressman's private transgressions are turned into a political issue?

These are not capricious matters. There is great risk that diversion by titillation may draw attention away from important questions of public morality (as emphatically distinct from moralism) such as allowing private gain to triumph over the public weal. A Congressman does far less harm when he uses his position to gain sexual favors than when he does improper favors for powerful vested interests.

The current moralistic mélange of politics and sexual prying has unhappy overtones of similar abuse by totalitarian plotters. From the Nazis' sexual purges to Moscow's bugged bedrooms, that mixture has been bad news to personal liberties, without any indication that it has added one iota to true morality, sexual or otherwise.

U.S. Judge Orders F.B.I. Chief To Testify at Trial of 2 Indians

By PAUL DELANEY
Special to The New York Times

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, July 6—A Federal judge today ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation's director, Clarence M. Kelley, to appear in court tomorrow under threat of contempt.

Mr. Kelley was subpoenaed by the defense to testify today in the trial of two Indians charged in the ambush slaying last year of two F.B.I. agents in an incident at the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota.

Federal District Judge Edward J. McManus directed Mr. Kelley's appearance over the objections of Federal prosecutors. When the director was not in court this morning, Judge McManus issued an order for him to appear at 9 A.M. tomorrow to show cause for his failure to honor the subpoena.

United States Attorney Evan Hultman said Mr. Kelley would testify tomorrow.

William Kunstler, defense attorney, said he wanted the bureau director's testimony in order to show that agents were responsible for the atmosphere that led to the deaths of the two agents, Ronald A. Williams and Jack R. Collier, on the reservation on June 26, 1975. The lawyer charged that members of the American Indian Movement had been harassed by members of the bureau's counter-intelligence program.

He said subpoenas had also been issued for Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho, and Representative Otis G. Pike, Democrat of Suffolk, who headed Congressional investigations of the program.

Mr. Kunstler charged today that the bureau was still engaged in a campaign of harassment. He said the agency issued a bulletin last Friday purporting to alert local police forces to planned attacks on officers by members of A.I.M., Students for a Democratic Society and militant Chicano organizations.

The lawyer introduced into evidence one such bulletin from the Connecticut State Police. Mr. Kunstler said the purpose of the bulletins was to give the police a pretext for creating incidents and killing militants. The bulletins said that the groups were planning disturbances and terrorism that included killing "a cop a day in each state."

The Connecticut document mentioned one individual, Rudolfo F. (Corky) Gonzalez, who was identified in the bulletin.

Army Finds Bodies Of 26 Wild Horses At Utah Waterhole

DUGWAY, Utah, July 6 (UPI)—More than two dozen wild horses have been found dead at a waterhole on the Dugway Proving Grounds in the Cedar Mountains range of western Utah, the Army reported today.

Twenty-six horses were discovered dead and 16 others were found ill at the Orr Springs waterhole on the western slope of the mountains. "The cause has not been determined," said Steve Horran, a Dugway Proving Ground spokesman. "Dugway has not conducted open air tests with toxic agents or noxious materials since 1969." He said state and Federal experts were trying to determine the cause of death.

A plane on a routine security check spotted the dead horses Sunday night. Army and veterinarians were sent to the scene immediately. They were joined yesterday by other experts.

A herd of 90 to 100 wild horses was found near the spring and fresh water is being hauled into the animals pending an analysis of the spring, which is being contaminated by the carcasses of the dead horses.

He said the only activity recently near the springs, located about 17 miles northwest of base mountains, had involved development of water sources for the wild horses.

About 250 horses run wild on the Dugway range and are jointly managed by the Army and the bureau. The other herds, located in the Granite Mountain and the North and Redcatch canyon areas, are in healthy condition, Mr. Horran said.

INQUIRY ALLEGED ON GIFTS TO BEAUME

Favors for Campaign Help Said to Be Investigated

By DENA KLEIMAN

A defense lawyer for a builder who contributed to Mayor Beame's campaign charged in court papers yesterday that the Manhattan District Attorney was investigating whether special favors were given by city officials in exchange for contributions.

District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau denied yesterday that such an investigation into campaign contributions was under way. However, an assistant district attorney in the office confirmed that the investigation was going on.

The investigation was reported in court papers filed by Martin R. Gold, an attorney for Arnold Kagan, a New York builder who contributed $14,225 to the Mayor's campaign, in a preliminary move to quash a subpoena for corporate records.

Justice Harold Baer of State Supreme Court yesterday ordered Mr. Morgenthau to show cause tomorrow why the return date for the subpoena should not be postponed.

Telephone calls to Mr. Gold's office for comment and to another lawyer mentioned in the court papers, Leonard M. Marks, were not returned. Efforts to reach Mr. Kagan at home were also fruitless.

An affidavit signed by Mr. Gold said that the subpoena for Mr. Kagan's records was issued "in connection with an investigation being conducted by [the District Attorney's Office] into various aspects of the 1973 mayoralty campaign of Hon. Abraham D. Beame."

"The District Attorney is investigating whether campaign funds were misappropriated by one or more persons," the affidavit said, "and whether special and unlawful consideration was given to other persons by present and former city officials in exchange for contributions to the campaign."

The assistant district attorney, who asked not to be identified, would not comment on the scope of the inquiry or whether others had been subpoenaed.

Sidney J. Frigand, a spokesman for Mayor Beame said that he was not aware of such an investigation and that he had spoken with the Mayor's spokesman, Bernard, who managed his father's campaign and that he said he was not aware of the investigation either.

LONG BEACH, Calif., July 6 (UPI)—A small silver crucifix dating from the 15th century and valued at $500,000 has been taken from a church.

The police said that the cross—just two inches by three inches—was kept in a box mounted on the altar of St. Michael's American Orthodox Chapel.

A priest at the church said that the cross and other religious material were apparently taken between 11:30 A.M. and 11 P.M. Sunday. Policemen were searching for an 18-year-old bandyman, who formerly worked for the church, for questioning.

There are, to be sure, women who have breakfast at the Regency as there are men there who wear double-knit suits, white loafers or floral shirts without neckties. By MAURICE CARROLL New York City put on a glorious climax for its Bicentennial party yesterday with an enthusiastically cheered march up Broadway by contingents from the big ships that line the waterfront. Under an electronic-age version of a ticker-tape parade—unfurling rolls of computer paper and multicolored bank deposit slips that looked like little flags as they fluttered down—more than 2,000 cadets and other sailors from a total of 38 countries marched nine-tenths of a mile from the United States Custom House north to City Hall, which was resplendent in flags and bunting. "It was the biggest birthday party in the world," said an ebullient Mayor Beame as he stepped back from a City Hall receiving line after the parade and suggested that the salute to the nation's 200th birthday had somehow restored the heart of a city that had suffered a gloomy year of fiscal tribulations. "I think the whole city revived," Mr. Beame said, "and I'm really proud to be the Mayor at this time."

What about the Democratic National Convention, which will move in this weekend before the last of the Bicentennial visitors have left? "It'll be a tough act to follow."

As most of the city reported for the first work-day of the nation's third century, reminders of the euphoric Fourth of July holiday lingered.

The most spectacular was the parade in front of cheering, flag-waving crowds that stood eight-deep along Broadway as the sailors followed what had been the main street of an apprehensive city under the guns of British warships 200 years ago when the nation declared its independence.

From Bowling Green, where Revolutionaries had torn down the statue of King George III for remodeling into musket balls to the white-columned City Hall, the site of which was on a common at the north of the tiny city where General Washington had the Declaration of Independence read to his troops, the ship people marched.

Queen Elizabeth II, great-great-granddaughter of King George III, stepped ashore from the royal yacht Britannia at Penn's Landing, Philadelphia, to join the celebration of the independence of the former British colonies. Her ceremonial appearances included one at Independence Hall, where the Declaration of Independence from her ancestor's rule was signed in 1776. Philadelphians gave her an enthusiastic reception. [Page 1, Columns 1-4.]

The language dispute that touched off rioting in which 176 people died in Johannesburg last month was resolved, when the South African government bowed to black demands for an end to the compulsory use of Afrikaans as a teaching medium in black schools. The concession to black pressure was unprecedented in the country's recent history, but there was no sign of further concessions on other black demands. [1:5.]

The Soviet Union launched a two-man Soyuz 21 spacecraft, apparently destined for a rendezvous with a space station put into orbit two weeks ago. An announcement nearly two hours later said it had attained earth orbit and that all on-board systems were functioning normally. [1:4.]

Israel's rescue of hijacked hostages and crew members held by terrorists in Uganda has ended, at least temporarily, the self-doubt and depression that had been eating at many Israelis since the surprise Arab attack in October 1973. A renewed sense of national pride was reflected at the funeral in Jerusalem of the American-born officer who was killed leading the rescue, despite deepening political isolation, a worsening economic squeeze and diplomatic defeats at the United Nations and elsewhere. [1:6.]

National

The Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 that Federal courts may not give habeas corpus relief to prisoners who say illegally obtained evidence was used against them in trials in state courts. The only exception permitted, was where defendants could show the state failed to provide a chance for full and fair litigation of their claim under the Fourth Amendment. Other decision on the final day of the Court year also took a restricted view of Fourth Amendment protection against "unreasonable searches and seizures." [1:8.]

Metropolitan

A strike of 40,000 workers at most of the city's voluntary hospitals appeared set for 6 A.M. today as negotiations remained at a standstill with a cost-of-living increase a key issue. It would affect 34 hospitals with 21,119 beds—all but one of them in New York City—where virtually the entire staff except doctors and nurses are represented by District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees. [1:7.]

There was administrative turmoil at the colleges of the City University as officials met to map faculty layoffs, amounting to more than a fifth of some staffs. City College said it would probably have to lay off 200 faculty members under the ordered 9 percent cut in spending. [1:8.]

Ronald Reagan made Jimmy Carter his target in a paid television broadcast forecasting his election strategy if he should win the Republican nomination from President Ford. He indicated the probable Democratic candidate was vague on issues and would fail to discipline "an irresponsible and wasteful Congress." [1:4.]

The Internal Revenue Service, which revoked two weeks ago the tax-exempt status of the Central States Pension Fund of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, has postponed at least part of its action until Aug. 31. The ruling appeared aimed at relieving the burden on employers who contribute and employees on whose behalf the contributions are made. The fund is also under investigation by Labor and Justice. "It seems to me that Independence Day, the Fourth of July, should be celebrated as much in Britain as in America. It was incorrectly reported in The Times last Friday that the New York State Legislature had passed a bill to provide pharmacists to require cheaper generic drugs to customers whose prescriptions indicate that a substitution for the more expensive brand-name drug is permissible. The bill died in committee.

Brooklyn Residents Storm Drug Center as Addicts Hurl Debris Into Street

BY SCHUMACH
Residents in the section of Brooklyn by years of protests against the behavior of a state-run drug center, became infuriated Friday morning by testy outburst and into the building.

They smashed through an outer door, then broke glass in hall doors, but were blocked by wire mesh and staff personnel. In their rage, the middle-class and lower middle-class residents of the integrated neighborhood set fire to two cars used by the drug center and broke a windshield on a third one before the police arrived.

"The quiet people finally had enough," said Jeanne Isoldi, who is active in a nearby block association. The resort to force by the neighborhood residents was provoked when the addicts threw debris and garbage from the windows of the building, which was once one of the best Y.M.C.A.'s in Brooklyn.

From the windows of the 12-story building came chairs, at least one desk, plastic bags of garbage, cans, cartons, bottles and food.

One woman was hit in the head by a can of paint and others had to run for cover in the brownstone houses that line the nearest streets on Fort Greene Place and South Elliot Place.

"They were trying to hit us," said Erasmo Garcia, a resident of the area. "They would wait until somebody passed and then throw at them."

According to residents, this was the third night in a row that the drug addicts threw debris from the windows. Last night's episode was the worst, they said.

Reinforcements Called
The police had to summon reinforcements and close off nearby streets as the firemen put out the blazes in the cars belonging to the narcotics center.

Paul Smith, a spokesman for the New York State office of Drug Abuse Services, when reached in Albany, said that there were usually about 200 addicts in the building and that at the time of last night's outbreak there were 174.

He said that the state was preparing to phase out those who were getting methadone treatment, but that other treatment would continue.

The police and state representatives seemed to agree with the version given by the residents about what caused the violence by the addicts.

Mr. Smith said: "Last night, residents of Brooklyn Central forced open windows and threw debris into the street. Some of the neighbors got riled up. They broke down the outer doors and broke glass in inner doors. They burned two of our vans and broke the windshield of a third."

Meeting Is Called
In an effort to head off a repetition of such incidents, a committee of community leaders met yesterday at the center with state officials.

An agreement was reached stating that in the future wire mesh would be installed in front of the windows and a guard, wearing a badge, would be stationed outside the building.

In addition to problems created by addicts within the building, the residents charged that they had often been molested by outpatients who loitered in the street, vilifying passers-by and accosting women.

Community groups, according to residents, have complained frequently since the drug center was opened in the late 1960's, but with little result, they said.

The director of the center, Harvey Chambers, could not be reached for comment.

What is particularly frustrating to the community, the residents said, is that for years efforts have been made to improve the neighborhood, which contains some brownstones more than 100 years old. The trees along the side streets were planted by community groups.

They are also incensed because the drug-center building contains an excellent gymnasium and swimming facilities that they would like to have available for children in the area.

Thomas Hunter of Ridgewood, spokesman for an ad hoc committee, said: "We have not taken a position on any particular state program. That is up to the Legislature, but we want them to do something to get the school reopened."

Captain Kjell Thorsen and Margrethe Asslid strolling through an honor guard of raised oars after being married aboard the Norwegian sailing ship Christian Radich yesterday.

Norway Captain Ties Marriage Knot at Seaport

"It's very romantic for us to be married in America, so why shouldn't I do it on my own ship."

As the throng alongside the vessel cheered, Captain and Mrs. Thorsen walked beneath an arch of eight crossed oars held by crew members.

The couple then went into one of the ship's cabins for a private dinner reception with 17 family members and friends.

Captain and Mrs. Thorsen, who were engaged in Baltimore when his ship was in the United States last summer, had been planning the wedding in America for six months.

The bride and groom will spend their wedding night on land, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. They sail tomorrow for Boston and Montreal before making the voyage back across the Atlantic.

While waiting for the bride, who was caught in midtown traffic, the captain smiled and said: "We will always remember being married in America in the year of the big celebration."

The half-hour ceremony, performed by the Rev. Lef Gundersen, the minister of the Norwegian Seaman's Church in Brooklyn, ended at 5:50 P.M. as the bride and groom rose from white silver-trimmed chairs to exchange vows.

Albany Housing-Bias Plan Is Scrapped As a Failure

By NATHANIEL SHEPPARD Jr.
A statewide program to end racial discrimination in housing and recruit more minority-group members as real estate brokers and salesmen has been scrapped as a failure after three years.

Officials of the New York State Division of Human Rights and the 5,600-member New York State Association of Realtors acknowledged in separate interviews that none of the 10 goals of the joint "affirmative action" program had been accomplished, but disagreed on why.

To establishing the program, the state's rights agency and the realtors acknowledged that "the real estate industry is the single most important factor in the elimination of discrimination in housing" and pledged to try to correct the problem through a program that included the following:

To make multiple housing listing services available to minority-group realtors.

To devise plans to end racial steering (sending blacks, for example, only to black areas), blockbusting and the practice of redlining in which some banks refuse to grant mortgage loans in certain minority communities.

To give all clients or customers interested in the sale, purchase or rental of property equal treatment without regard to race, creed, color, national origin or sex.

"More Aggressive" Effort
"As far as I have been able to determine, there has not been any movement or accomplishment on the part of the realtors since the program was started," Commissioner Werner H. Kramarsky of the state's rights agency said.

"One of the reasons is that the realtors were left alone to police themselves with no provisions for monitoring by the state," he said, "and you can't have a workable program under those restrictions."

Mr. Kramarsky said that his agency had notified the state realtors' association that it planned to scrap the agreement and that the state would replace it with "a more aggressive" enforcement effort. He would not elaborate on the new effort.

Charles M. Staro, executive vice president of the New York State Association of Realtors, whose members represent 52 real estate boards in the state, said:

"If I am to be candid, nothing has come out of the program. The goals were nice and we feel the program planning was in the right direction, but it didn't have enough teeth and there were no specific goals for local boards to achieve."

"The goals were too broad and we didn't have the resources and manpower to carry out the program's provisions."

In December 1975, the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development threatened to withdraw its endorsement of the effort unless the realtors' group could show that progress had been made, according to a letter from Mr. Staro to the state rights agency.

He suggested in the same letter that one of the state agency's representatives should address a meeting of the local boards to explain the implementation of the program so "we can display to H.U.D. that something indeed will be done in New York State and perhaps to so doing, any negativism on the part of H.U.D. can be dispelled."

And although Mr. Staro denied in an interview that local real estate boards had been reluctant to accept the program, he wrote the state agency that he was concerned that if he sent out the program guidelines without explanation by a state official, they "might be treated rather lightly and in many instances merely filed away for future reference or perhaps no use at all."

"Knowing our people as I do, it is oftentimes best to explain to them the intent before giving them the mechanics with which to accomplish the task," Mr. Staro wrote the state agency.

Mr. Staro said his association was still committed to the principles of open housing and had just endorsed a new plan promulgated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the National Realtors Association.

"This plan," he said "had teeth and specific goals that could be accomplished."

Assembly Debates Proposal for Income Tax

By ALFONSO A. NARVAEZ

July 6—The New York Legislature failed to pass legislation in sessions last week in debate on a bill to raise revenues that the state's public accountants have been closed today under or Jersey Supreme they were not financed.

It was back in 1975, a dinner being held to pass a bill earlier in the year. Electronic voting had a 40-to-37 vote margin. The bill was defeated by a 40-to-37 vote margin.

He said that he also wanted assurances that the final report of the tax convention would be put up for a vote in the Legislature.

Contillo Holds Out
Another Democratic Assemblyman who opposed the income tax in the vote today was Paul J. Contillo, Democrat of Paramus. Last Friday he first voted for the income tax but then abstained when it went down to defeat. He also held out for a measure he wanted.

The bill he proposes calls for residential property owners to deduct $5,000 from the true value of their homes before property taxes would begin to be levied.

"I told the leadership on Friday to put my bill up first," he said after he voted "no" today. "Without the additional homestead exemption it's a bad income tax."

The Democrats did pick up one Republican vote, that of Carl Weide, Republican of Kensington, and had assurances that they could get another one if they came within striking distance of a 41 vote. However, the vote, which was not officially recorded, never went beyond 37 votes in favor.

the same as been defeated when the bill was defeated within two days. He approved. On imposing a 2.5 percent increase over that figure.

July 6—Joshua school program at St. Joseph's Regional High School in Montvale. A school spokesman said 500 students were already enrolled this summer compared to the normal enrollment of 20 to 40.

Some parents are finding solutions of their own to the summer school problem. They began June 24. Teachers for the program were recruited from the Pasack Valley and Pasack Hills school systems.

The students are charged $50 for one course and $80 for two. A state education spokesman said this was in line with fees charged at public summer schools.

Concerned parents in the Ridgewood area have begun a petition drive to try to pressure the Legislature to remain in session until the problem of school financing is resolved.

Thomas Hunter of Ridgewood, spokesman for an ad hoc committee, said: "We have not taken a position on any particular state program. That is up to the Legislature, but we want them to do something to get the school reopened."

Jersey Woman, 27, Killed As Small Plane Crashes

Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, July 6—A 27-year-old New Jersey woman was killed today when her single-engine plane crashed and burned in a wooded area about 400 yards from a residential neighborhood.

The woman, Marya Seaton of Irvington, had taken off alone from the Morristown, N.J., airport at 8 A.M. in a 1974 Cessna 172 Skyhawk.

Sounded Like Bomb
According to several witnesses, the plane appeared over East White Plains at 9:35 A.M., then slowly lost altitude and disappeared behind a clump of trees.

The West Harrison Fire Chief, Michael Siciliano, said he had been standing in front of his firehouse watching the plane fly over nearby Silver Lake. He made the remark, "I think that plane is flying too low," then it went behind the trees and I heard a crash like a bomb went off," he said, adding that

"seconds later I saw the smoke."

According to Walter Pefers, an investigator for the state police, Miss Seaton was an experienced pilot who had been preparing for an instrument rating test. There was speculation that she had been flying on instruments at the time of the crash, although she had not made radio contact with the Westchester County Airport, which is about five miles from the crash scene, he said.

She had been scheduled to fly with an instructor from the Federal Aviation Administration this morning, but the instructor had not arrived at Morristown Airport and she left alone, the investigator added.

Miss Seaton belonged to the Belle Aire Flying Club, which owned the plane, according to Robert Slayton, a chief pilot at Morristown Airport. She was the daughter of George Seaton of Dover, N. J.

Bergman's Sentence Is Delayed

Bernard Bergman, who was scheduled today to begin a four-month Federal sentence for Medicaid and tax frauds, was granted a delay pending a hearing on his application for a two-month postponement. Judge Marvin E. Frankel, who sentenced the nursing-home operator, declined to discuss the matter.

But Gustave H. Newman, one of Mr. Bergman's lawyers, said they had applied to have the sentence postponed to mid-September when Mr. Bergman is to be sentenced in New York State Supreme Court in Manhattan on a bribery charge, on the ground that the two cases were linked under a plea bargain. Mr. Newman said that Judge Frankel had agreed to delay the incarceration to Friday, pending a hearing on the motion.

Stamford, Conn., Area Has Blackout

Three thousand homes in northern sections of Stamford, Conn., were without electricity from 12:30 A.M. to 5:30 A.M. because a main feeder cable carrying 13.2 kilovolt to a substation on High Ridge Road failed. Emergency repair crews of the Hartford Electric Light Company routed service around the defective aerial cable in the early morning hours and replaced it later in the day.

L.I. Towns Barred in Concorde Case

The Town of Hempstead, L. I., and a number of other Queens and Nassau County communities were barred from taking part in the pending court battle over the operation of the Concorde supersonic jet at Kennedy International Airport. Judge Milton Pollack, of Federal District Court, while recognizing the interest of the communities in combating noise pollution, ruled that the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey was capable of representing their interests in court. He said, however, that the communities' rights to intervene in the case might be re-evaluated if the applicants could prove that the Port Authority was not representing their interests with adequate vigor.

10 Indicted in Mail Conspiracy

Ten men were indicted in Manhattan on Federal charges of conspiracy to steal more than $200,000 in checks from mailboxes and mail trucks. The 38-count indictment alleged that they stole mail in Manhattan, took it to an apartment in the Red Hook section of Brooklyn, sorted out the checks and threw out the remaining mail. The defendants, all from Brooklyn and Staten Island, allegedly cashed more than $200,000 in stolen checks from September 1975 to March 1976.

Right Turns at Red Lights Enacted

New Jersey motorists will be permitted to make right turns at red lights next year under a bill signed into law by Governor Byrne. The law takes effect next Jan. 2 to allow time for education of the public. Under its provisions, motorists will be allowed to make right turns on red lights after coming to a full stop and observing traffic conditions. Such turns, however, may be prohibited at specific intersections.

The appellate judge said the trial judge had to interrupt one day of his summation when he noticed that a juror had fallen asleep.

Members of Brooklyn Gang Convicted—Leader Faces 2 Other Murder Charges

By MAX H. SEIGEL

Two members of a gang of teen-agers that preyed on impoverished, elderly Jews in the Brownsville and East Flatbush areas of Brooklyn have been convicted of the murder of a 71-year-old man in a robbery that netted them a music box worth $3.

The victim, Abraham Pomerantz of 491 East 94th Street, was found dead of suffocation on March 24, 1975, in a neighbor's apartment that had been ransacked. His hands and feet had been trussed and

Licensing of Teachers Is Urged

By LEONARD BUDER

A proposal that all new teachers in New York State be licensed in the same manner as physicians, lawyers and members of other professions has been made by a special task force on Teacher Education and Certification appointed by Ewald B. Nyquist, the State Education Commissioner.

At present, new public school teachers here and in most other states need only pass specified college courses to receive state certification. Private and parochial school teachers often do not even need certification.

The task force's recommendations, which are certain to stir debate, come at a time when there is mounting dissatisfaction with traditional methods of training and certifying teachers.

In recent years, a national movement has developed, with New York State in the forefront, toward so-called competency-based teacher education. Under this system, which has provoked considerable controversy, education students are required to demonstrate mastery of specific skills in actual and simulated teaching experiences. Opposition from teacher unions and other sources has slowed or blunted this movement in some areas.

Report Submitted The 21-member task force, which was headed by Arnold Gardner, a former president of the Buffalo Board of Education, recently submitted a preliminary report to Commissioner Nyquist. The final report is not expected until early next year.

Although the preliminary report was not formally made public, a number of its recommendations have become known. These include: A statewide licensing examination should be established for all people seeking to become teachers. Successful candidates would be required to demonstrate they have mastered a defined body of knowledge that is regarded as unique to teachers, just as members of other professions have to do in their fields.

New teachers should serve a one-year internship period, for which they would get paid, as part of their preparation for licensure.

A master's degree should be the minimum requirement for new teachers. At present, teachers can receive provisional state certification with a bachelor's degree. To obtain permanent certification, a teacher must now obtain 30 academic credit hours beyond the bachelor's degree—but not necessarily a master's—over the following five years.

Professional Practices Board should be established in teaching, somewhat similar to those operating in other fields, to provide for direct decision-making by the profession.

The task force included deans and faculty members from schools of education, school administrators, teachers, students, community representatives, and officials of school unions, among them Thomas Y. Hobart Jr., president of the New York State United Teachers.

'Upgrading' Sought Mr. Hobart, commenting on the proposals by the task force in the last issue of his union's newspaper, the New York Teacher, said that the recommendations should, if implemented, lead to an important "upgrading" of the teaching profession. This is especially important, he said, in these times of economic crisis when "employers have really not been looking for the best qualified, they have been looking for the cheapest."

Meanwhile, as the panel turns its attention to its final report, Commissioner Nyquist and other top state education officials are examining the preliminary proposals. "There are a lot of new ideas here that need to be studied," said Dr. T. Edward Hollander, the deputy commissioner for higher and professional education.

The newly chartered American Federation of School Administrators will hold its first convention today and tomorrow at the Americana Hotel here. The union, which was chartered by American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations, says it represents 10,000 principals and other school supervisors in 54 locals across the country.

At the convention, the organization will elect officers (Walter J. Degnan, the former president of the New York City school supervisors' union, is scheduled to become national president), and consider problems confronting school administrators.

Bryn Mawr College has gone over the top in its largest fund-raising campaign. The Pennsylvania College raised $23 million—$2 million more than the goal originally set for July 4. The college said the $23 million total represented an average gift of more than $2,000 per living alumnae of record during the three and a half years of the campaign.

More than 70 per cent of the college's alumnae made gifts to the campaign, "an extraordinary record of alumnae loyalty," according to the college announcement. Grants from foundations accounted for 22 per cent of the dollar total, and corporate philanthropy accounted for more than 3 per cent, reflecting a new ability by the college to reach beyond alumnae contributions, officials said.

SYMPATHY STRIKES BACKED BY COURT

U.S. Judges Restricted on No-Walkout Contracts

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—Federal judges may not prevent union workers with no-strike contracts from walking off the job in sympathy with another union, the Supreme Court ruled today.

The 5-to-4 ruling affirmed lower court decisions in a case involving a sympathy strike at the Buffalo Forge Company's plants and offices in the Buffalo, N.Y., area.

Production and maintenance employees went on strike in November 1974 in support of clerical and technical workers who were striking after several months of contract negotiations.

Each group was represented by separate locals of the United Steelworkers of America. The company sought a Federal court injunction against the production and maintenance workers, citing the no-strike clause in their contract.

The district judge said he had no authority under Federal law to issue an injunction. The high court majority agreed with him.

Writing for the majority, Justice Byron R. White said that the issue should have been referred to an arbitrator.

"Whether the sympathy strike the union called violated the no-strike clause, and the appropriate remedies if it did, are subject to the agreed-upon dispute-settlement procedures of the contract and are ultimately issues for the arbitrator," Justice White wrote.

If the arbitrator concluded that the strike was illegal, the Federal court then would have authority to issue an injunction against him, the Court said.

against them at trial in violation of the "exclusionary rule"—the rule that prohibits admission of evidence seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment.

Where the inmate has an opportunity to appeal to the state appeals court on the ground of the alleged Fourth Amendment violation, in other words, and the state appellate procedure is "full and fair," said the inmate loses his appeal.

court trial, because it was illegally obtained, the Federal Government may use it against the owner in a civil proceeding to adjudicate tax liability.

In 1960, the high court had ruled that evidence that was illegally seized by state officers could not be used against the defendant in a Federal criminal trial.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun, writing for the majority in today's tax liability case, stressed that it was a civil proceeding to adjudicate tax liability.

In another decision today, written by Justice Powell, the Court ruled 7 to 2 that it was constitutional for the Border Patrol, in its efforts to catch illegal aliens, to stop and question motorists at permanent "reasonably located" checkpoints on the highways—even when the officials have no warrants and no reasonable suspicion about the motorists they stop.

The Court also said it was constitutional for Border Patrol officials to refer motorists selectively from the initial checkpoint to a secondary inspection area for questioning, on the basis of criteria that would not be enough to sustain the constitutionality of stops made by roving patrol cars.

It said that this type of referral was all right "even if it be assumed that such referrals are made largely on the basis of apparent Mexican ancestry."

Earlier Cases Cited In several recent rulings involving Border Patrol searches, the Court had seemed to demand more justification for a stop. In one case, for example, the Court said that warrantless roving patrol stops of motorists to inquire about the occupants' citizenship violated the Fourth Amendment search and seizure rule unless the officers were aware of specific "articulate" facts, which together with reasonable inferences that could be drawn from the facts would reasonably give rise to the suspicion that there were illegal aliens in the cars.

In the fourth search and seizure decision today, the Court found that a police search of a glove compartment of a locked car that was impounded for noninvestigatory reasons was not an unreasonable search. Hence, evidence found in the glove compartment—it was marijuana—was admissible at trial.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger wrote for the majority. In this case, the Court was split more deeply, 5 to 4. All the members of the majority were Justices appointed by Presidents Ford and Nixon. The dissenters were Justices who were members of the Court in the Warren era.

Chief Justice Burger contended that the Court had always distinguished between automobiles and other search situations, such as a person's home, giving law enforcement officers more leeway regarding searches of cars largely because of the lessened expectation of privacy a person has regarding his or her car.

The dissenters disputed the majority's historical analysis. In any event, today's decision ratified a long-standing and apparently common police practice, but, on the other hand, does so for the first time, allowed policemen more leeway than the Court has allowed previously in such searches.

In the habeas corpus case, the Court contended that the main purpose of the rule was to deter police misconduct. It said it agreed that the rule should be applied at a level and in a manner that, after that, it said, it likely became minor.

The major dissent in the habeas corpus case, written by Justice Powell, contended that the rule should be applied at a level and in a manner that, after that, it said, it likely became minor.

In 1967, the Court began to review the Court's "immediate" decision to review the habeas corpus case.

Then, in Court's decision, the Court contended that the main purpose of the rule was to deter police misconduct. It said it agreed that the rule

OKLAHOMA LOSES
DEATH PENALTY

Strikes Down Law as Violating Unishment Ban

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The Supreme Court took the following actions today:

ABORTION
It agreed to review three cases involving the availability of abortions to the poor. One case, from St. Louis, raises the question whether a municipal hospital may refuse to make elective abortions available. (Poelker v. Doe, No. 75-554).

ANTITRUST
The Court ruled that an electric company that supplies light bulbs without charge to its customers is not immune from lawsuits under the Federal antitrust laws just because the state commission that regulates utilities has approved the marketing practice. The ruling, in a Michigan case, reversed the lower court decision.

CRIMINAL
By vote of 6 to 3, the Court ruled that Federal courts may not give habeas corpus relief to state court prisoners on the ground that the prosecution's evidence was obtained in a search or seizure that violated the Fourth Amendment, as long as the state has given the defendant an opportunity for "full and fair" litigation of the Fourth Amendment claim. Justice Powell wrote for the majority; Justices Brennan and Marshall egin dissented. The ruling came in consolidated cases, U.S. v. Martinez-Fuerte, No. 74-1560; Sifuentes v. U.S., No. 75-5387.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT
Citing its rulings last week on the death penalty, the Court summarily struck down Oklahoma's death penalty law as unconstitutional. The Oklahoma statute specified death as the mandatory penalty for certain types of murders, such as killing for hire and killing a policeman.

HEALTH HOSPITALS
The Court struck down the law in acting on six pending appeals by persons sentenced to death under that law. In each case it said that the judgments of the Court of Criminal Appeals of Oklahoma were vacated "insofar as they leave undisturbed the death penalty imposed," and it remanded the cases for new sentencing. Justices Burger, White and Rehnquist stated that they would have simply vacated the judgments and remanded the cases "for further consideration" in view of the high court's capital punishment rulings last week.

TEST IN GEORGIA
ATLANTA, July 6.—One of the first tests of Georgia's death penalty law may involve 27-year-old Troy Leon Gregg, who once told the police that he killed two men who gave him a ride in 1973 because "by God, I wanted them dead."

MOTORISTS IN RIO BACKLOG
RIO DE JANEIRO (UPI)—Excavations for Rio's "metro" subway system, scheduled to be functioning by the end of 1979, have fouled up the already grindingly fitful flow of traffic.

Summary of Actions Taken by the Supreme Court

Justice Blackmun wrote for the majority. Justices Brennan, Marshall, and Stewart dissented. Justice Stevens, who was not yet a member of the Court when the case was argued, did not participate in the ruling.

In another 5-4 vote, the Court ruled that Federal courts may not enjoin a sympathy strike by one union's members in support of other unions, pending an arbitrator's decision on whether the strike violated a no-strike clause in the collective bargaining contract. Justice White wrote the majority opinion; Justices Stevens, Brennan, Marshall and Powell dissented. (Buffalo Forge Co. v. Steelworkers, No. 75-339).

Justice Powell again wrote for the majority. Justices Brennan and Marshall egin dissented. The ruling came in consolidated cases, U.S. v. Martinez-Fuerte, No. 74-1560; Sifuentes v. U.S., No. 75-5387.

In a third case, U.S. v. Janis, No. 74-958, the Court ruled 5 to 3 that evidence that was illegally seized by state law enforcement officials and ruled inadmissible in state criminal proceedings, may be used by the Federal Government as evidence against the owner in a civil tax proceeding.

TRAMSTERS GIVEN
PENSION REPRIEVE

Continued From Page 1. Col. 1 tax exemption, contributions to the fund are not tax deductible by employers; employees must report the contributions as income and pay tax on them, and the fund itself must pay tax on its earnings.

The latest I.R.S. action, which was described in a letter to the fund sent over the weekend, modified its earlier ruling in relation only to the employees. Originally the I.R.S. took action against all three parties retroactive to 1965, but it has been criticized for punishing the wrong people.

An I.R.S. spokesman, while repeatedly refusing to discuss what the tax agency was doing or not doing with regard to a particular taxpayer, said yesterday that in general terms, "We are free to carve out the groups and entities and individuals who can be treated differently."

The spokesman said that under the internal revenue code "the authority is there to make certain decisions prospective or retroactive."

He said that, in general, a decision to postpone the effect of a ruling would be made without a hearing and that it was not unusual that there may not have been one with regard to the tramsters' fund, whose official name is the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund.

However, there were reports that pressure had been brought on the I.R.S. both by members of Congress and by the Ford Administration to postpone or rescind its ruling, which Senator Jacob K. Javits of New York described last week as "draconian."

It was also reported that a number of employers were refusing to make contributions to the fund until the tax problems had been resolved. Under the teamsters' National Master Freight Agreement, employers must contribute $25 a week an employee (just raised from $22 a week). Employees make no contribution.

The members of the Labor-Justice task force which is investigating alleged violations of the Federal pension law by the fund, were angered by the original I.R.S. ruling, which was taken without their knowledge.

The I.R.S., which has not been cooperating with the other departments, based its action on the tax laws, in its first letter to the fund, sent from the Chicago office on June 25, the I.R.S. said it was revoking the fund's tax exemption because of mismanagement and questionable loan practices.

The latest I.R.S. action, which was described in a letter to the fund sent over the weekend, modified its earlier ruling in relation only to the employees. Originally the I.R.S. took action against all three parties retroactive to 1965, but it has been criticized for punishing the wrong people.

An I.R.S. spokesman, while repeatedly refusing to discuss what the tax agency was doing or not doing with regard to a particular taxpayer, said yesterday that in general terms, "We are free to carve out the groups and entities and individuals who can be treated differently."

The spokesman said that under the internal revenue code "the authority is there to make certain decisions prospective or retroactive."

He said that, in general, a decision to postpone the effect of a ruling would be made without a hearing and that it was not unusual that there may not have been one with regard to the tramsters' fund, whose official name is the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund.

However, there were reports that pressure had been brought on the I.R.S. both by members of Congress and by the Ford Administration to postpone or rescind its ruling, which Senator Jacob K. Javits of New York described last week as "draconian."

Music: Impressive Soloists in Mozart

By ALLEN HUGHES
Concerts for two or more soloists are being featured in the Mostly Mozart Festival concerts at Alice Tully Hall this week. Jaime Laredo, who usually devotes himself to playing the violin or viola, has now added conducting to his activities and is leading the Festival Orchestra.
Functioning in the informal manner of an 18th-century kapellmeister rather than the podium-mounting, baton-wielding style of a conventional conductor, today, Mr. Laredo is presiding over performances of Bach's Concerto in D minor for Two Violins, Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in B minor for Four Violins and Concerto in E minor for Cello and Bassoon, Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante for Violin, Cello, Oboe and Bassoon and Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for Violin and Viola.
An impressive list of soloists has been arrived at by bringing in the entire Guarneri Quartet (Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violinists; Michael Tree, violist, and David Soyer, cellist), adding Leonard Arner, Oboist, and Loren Glickman, bassoonist, and including Mr. Laredo himself as violinist in three of the concertos.
On Monday night, in the first presentation of this program, the performances had the kind of hearty vitality and integrity that has characterized Mostly Mozart orchestral concerts from their earliest years. Apart from a couple of flubs from the French horns, the expertise of the ensemble players remained pretty well unscathed. Slickness and savvy were not much in evidence, but the interpretations were well coordinated all the same.
The curiosity of the program note suggested, in what might be termed gross understatement, that this piece might have been experimental. It is, in fact, so peculiar and so tentative in its effects, that one wonders if Vivaldi himself actually considered it a viable work. Since the poor man is long since dead and cannot defend himself, it seems a bit unfair to present so atypical and ineffective a piece as this in a concert, but Vivaldi will probably survive the insult.

Basie and All-Star Group Close Jazz Festival With Real Dance

The best thing about the Newport Jazz Festival's Farewell Dance, which was held at Roseland Dance City on Monday, was that it was a dance. The music, which was provided by an all-star group and by the Count Basie band, gathered a momentum that it would probably not have attained in the more comfortable but less informal confines of a concert hall. When it built up a rhythmic tension that demanded expression in movement, the means of expression was at hand.
The all-star group was almost identical to combinations of musicians that have performed at numerous Newport events, particularly the Mid-night Jam Sessions at Radio City Music Hall. But this time the musicians were playing for dancers, and for listeners who were crowding up around the bandstand, and as a result their solo choruses were much more lively and committed than the usual jam-session fare.
Eddie (Lockjaw) Davis and Illinois Jacquet, two tenor saxophonists with rough, growling sounds, were especially superb. Mr. Jacquet was more restrained than usual, but no less appealing, while Mr. Davis gurgled and honked and reared back before unleashing his upper register whoops. There were other exciting solos from other soloists, the tenor saxophonist, and Vic Dickenson, the trombonist.
Imaginative Solos
The Basie band, making its third appearance at this year's festival, played its dance arrangements, which were smooth and functional. The band's soloists did not project the sort of electricity that the previous set had generated, with the exception of the trombone soloist, Al Grey. Waving his plunger mute in front of the bell of his horn like a red flag in front of a bull, Mr. Grey charged into several blues-drenched solos of great imagination and energy as the dancers cheered him on.
The success of the Farewell Dance, and of the Jazz Fair, which took place on Monday afternoon, suggests that not all Newport events necessarily belong in concert halls. Some of the groups that performed at the fair did belong indoors, but some of the jam-session groupings that performed in Radio City would have made much more sense, and more exciting music, in an atmosphere like that of Roseland.

SPECIAL PROSECUTOR LOSES BID ON CASES

The special anticorruption prosecutor's office lost two attempts yesterday to reopen key cases that it lost last month.
In one case, the State Court of Appeals said that it would not hear rearguments of a decision in which it had decided that the special prosecutor's jurisdiction was "limited strictly to the criminal-justice process or system" in New York City.
Maurice H. Nadjari, who was replaced as special prosecutor last week by John F. Keenan had interpreted his jurisdiction more broadly than that.
In a second case, the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court in Brooklyn declined to modify an opinion relating to the reversal of the conviction and dismissal of an indictment against Thomas J. Mackell, the former Queens District Attorney.
Last month, after the Court of Appeals said that it could not look at the lower court's reasons for the reversal because the reversal was based "on the law and the facts," the special prosecutor's office asked the Appellate Court in Brooklyn to change its earlier ruling to read "on the law alone." By that state law, that would have enabled the Court of Appeals to review the reasons for the reversal. But yesterday, the appellate court refused to do so, saying that it had considered "the facts" initially.

Christine Weidinger, Met Soprano, Bride

Christine Weidinger, a soprano with the Metropolitan Opera for the last four years, was married last night in Phoenix, Ariz., to Kenneth Smith, assistant house manager at the Metropolitan.
The Rev. Dr. Richard Jackson performed the ceremony in the North Phoenix Baptist Church.
The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Weidinger of Phoenix, has a three-year contract with the Stuttgart Opera in Germany and is scheduled to make her debut there on Aug. 28 as Susanna in "Le Nozze di Figaro."
Mr. Smith, son of Mrs. Otto Tesler of Hilton Head, S.C., received B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of North Carolina.

IM '76 HARVEST

LIAM ROBBINS
 The New York Times
 STON, July 6—An American company has bought 50,000 tons of soybeans from the United States, the second largest purchase in recent days, the Department reported.

The sale, which was reported by the company, is the largest since the 1976 harvest. The sale is expected to be completed by the end of the month. Car Sales Up 20.9% in Final Third of June

Big 3 Market Strong While A.M.C. and Imports Slip

Special to The New York Times
 DETROIT, July 6—Domestic new car sales climbed 20.9 percent in the final third of June from the year-earlier level, according to reports by the manufacturers today.

Combined domestic-import sales for the full month of 955,148 were 19 percent higher than last year, and the best since 979,770 cars were sold in October 1973.

The annual selling rate climbed to 8.9 million domestic cars in June from 8.7 million in May. Import sales dropped again to a 1.3 million annual rate from 1.4 million in May.

Discounts on Subcompacts Domestic auto executives said sales were up without the need for discounts, common in the summer, although some discounts are being offered on slow-selling subcompact cars. The companies reported heavy demand for compact and intermediate cars.

Some full-size cars such as Mercurys are in short supply this summer. The General Motors Corporation, which is shortening its full-size car line with the 1977 model next fall, reported strong sales for the larger 1976 cars.

Two G.M. luxury car divisions, Oldsmobile and Cadillac, both had sales records in June. Industrywide sales for the June 21-30 period totaled 336,489 in nine days for a 37,385 daily rate compared with last year's 247,440 in eight days for a 30,930 rate.

This raised sales for the full month to 829,146 domestic cars, a rate of 31,890 in 26 days, compared with last June's 818,763, a rate of 24,751 in 25 days. The daily selling rate was up 29 percent.

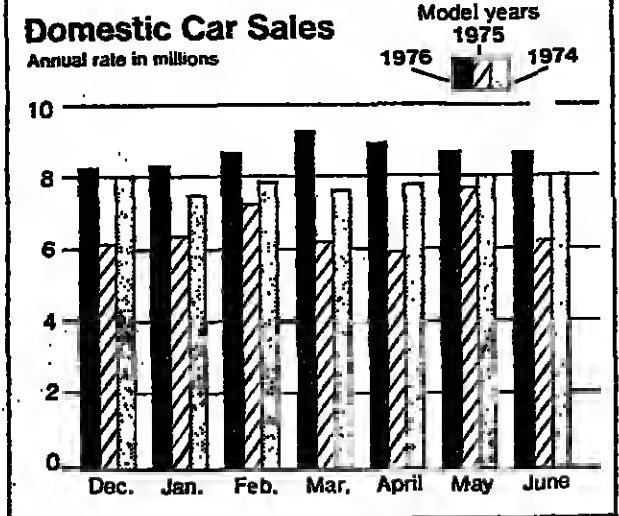

The daily rate was the fourth best for the month. The record is 41,720 in June 1973. But the rate last month was the best for any month since July 1973, when it was 32,316.

While the United States industry's Big Three—G.M., Ford Motor Company and the Chrysler Corporation—are all enjoying strong sales, the fourth domestic concern, the American Motors Corporation, continued to report declining sales.

A.M.C., a small-car specialist at a time when the public is turning toward larger models, had a 50 percent sales decline in the final third of June and Car buyers checking papers at West Park Chevrolet in Cleveland. Domestic auto sales rose almost 21 percent in the last third of June, while sales of imports declined.

STATE FARM DROPS OFFER TO AID GEICO

Pullout Could Disrupt Plans for Other Insurers to Help the Troubled Company

WASHINGTON, July 6—The State Farm Mutual automobile insurance company has withdrawn its offer to help bail out the financially troubled Government Employees Insurance Company, a spokesman said today.

The pullout of the nation's largest auto insurer could wreck a plan to have other insurance companies take over $25 million worth of Geico's policies.

"State Farm is no longer a party to that program," said Thomas C. Morrill, a vice president of the company.

District of Columbia Insurance Commissioner Maximilian Wallach, who engineered the plan to reinsure 40 percent of Geico's policies, was unavailable for comment.

According to Mr. Morrill, State Farm offered on June 22 to reinsure 15 percent of the policies. One week later, the vice president said, State Farm told Mr. Wallach its offer would expire at the close of business on June 30 unless 100 percent of the policies were taken over.

Optimism Expressed Last Thursday, Mr. Wallach reported the policies were 75 to 80 percent reinsured, and he was optimistic he would get offers for the remaining policies. However, he did not have 100 percent of the policies reinsured by June 30, Mr. Morrill said.

Mr. Morrill refused to comment on what effect State Farm's withdrawal would have on the reinsurance plan. Other insurance companies have said they would pull out if State Farm did not participate.

The reinsurance plan was part of a three-phase effort to save Geico. Last week, the company's board of directors voted to offer $75 million worth of preferred stock late this summer, as part two of the rescue effort.

Meanwhile, trading of Geico common stock was resumed today on the over-the-counter market where Geico shares were bid at 3/4 at the close on volume of 790,300, leading the most-active list.

Shearson as Consultants The beleaguered Government Employees Insurance Company announced yesterday that it had retained Shearson Hayden Stone Inc. as consultants to the company.

Big Board Closing Profitable Loophole

Tape Racing Found to Have Aided Certain Brokers in I.B.M. Stock

By ROBERT J. COLE
 The New York Stock Exchange, acting on a complaint from the Chicago Board of Options Exchange, has closed a highly profitable loophole that enabled a handful of stockbrokers with good contacts on the Big Board trading floor to make substantial profits in International Business Machines Corporation stock, Wall Street sources disclosed yesterday.

The loophole, called tape racing, enabled floor brokers and traders to relay to associates price quotations that were in their possession for periods of up to two minutes before they became public and were printed on the exchange's ticker tape, these sources said.

Such information, obtained by trading floor personnel as part of their normal activities, was relayed to brokers off the trading floor who, in turn, would place orders for I.B.M. options on the Chicago options exchange.

I.B.M. a volatile stock, is one of the most heavily traded issues on the C.B.O.E. and, therefore, closely watched.

If, for example, a broker on the Big Board trading floor could tell an associate, before it became public information, that a trade had just taken place down 1/4 a share, the associate could then sell I.B.M. options before the option price fell.

If, say, the stock rose 1/4, the associate, with such advance knowledge, could buy I.B.M. options before the price went up.

An option is the right to buy or sell stock at a given price within a given period. So far only call options—or the right to buy stock—are available.

The C.B.O.E. is understood to have complained to the Big Board after its I.B.M. market makers began to notice that, almost like poker players with X-ray eyes, stockbrokers were consistently "doing the right thing."

To solve the problem, the Big Board last week moved an optical scanning machine situated at the I.B.M. trading post from one spot to another about 15 feet away, thus reducing the time it takes to print a transaction in I.B.M. stock on the ticker tape from about two minutes to only 15 seconds.

Each stock transaction as it takes place is recorded on an electronically readable card and handed to a page clerk to place in an optical scanner, one Balanced or Too Slow?

Views Differ on Growth Rate, but There Is No Real Dispute on Facts or Outlook

By LEONARD SILK
 The United States economy, having completed the first phase of its recovery from the worst recession of the postwar period, has settled into a moderate rate of growth. From the standpoint of the Ford Administration, the expansion is just about right—"well balanced"—is the favorite term. From the standpoint of the Democrats, hoping to take over the White House in part on the economic issue, the rate of growth is too slow, the level of unemployment too high and the rate of inflation too great.

Although beauty or ugliness lies in the eye of the beholder, the facts on the state of the economy and the forecast about the near-term outlook—through the election period and to the end of 1976—are not in real dispute.

The big bulls and the big bears of a year ago were both wrong. The economy has neither boomed nor relapsed into a second phase of the slump.

The first phase of the recovery (from the first quarter of 1975 through the first quarter of 1976) was a little faster than could be sustained once the swing in inventories was over. In the first quarter of last year, inventories were being cut at an annual rate of 25 billion. In the second quarter that rate of stock-cutting climbed to $30 billion.

But in the second half of 1975, the rate of inventory decline slowed to a bare $2 billion, and in the first quarter of this year, business added $15.5 billion to stocks.

Thus, the inventory swing added over $40 billion to the business recovery from the first quarter of 1975 to the first quarter of 1976.

In retrospect, the 1973-75 slump was in large measure an inventory recession. From peak to trough, inventories fell by $30 billion.

But now, having finished the swing back to stock-building, the rate of growth in total national output will be somewhat slower. The increase in real gross national product during the second quarter of this year is likely to be less than 5 percent at an annual rate.

Morris Cohen, chief economist of Schroeder, Nesess & Thomas, is estimating it at 4 percent "plus," or about half of the 8.7 percent rate of advance in the first quarter of 1976.

George Perry of the Brookings Institution has pinpointed the second-quarter rise in real G.N.P. at 4.6 percent. Thereafter, Mr. Perry sees real output climbing at annual rates of 5.1 percent and 6.9 percent in the final two quarters of the year.

Those Perry forecasts are not much different from what Alan

U. S. LETTERS DUE ON FOREIGN AUTOS

Treasury to Tell Makers to Bring Prices in Line With Antidumping Rules

WASHINGTON, July 6 (UPI)—The Treasury Department has prepared letters to major foreign car manufacturers instructing them to bring their United States auto prices in line with Government antidumping regulations.

Assistant Treasury Secretary David Macdonald said that of the 15 to 20 concerns that would receive letters shortly from the department, only "five or six" manufacturers are "not in compliance" with existing regulations.

A year-long Treasury investigation concluded about two months ago that some manufacturers of foreign cars were charging less for their products in the United States than they were in their own countries. This practice violates antidumping regulations.

Normally when a foreign manufacturer is found guilty of dumping, the Treasury imposes heavy import duties on his product. However, in the auto case, the department decided to remedy the situation by directly appealing to makers of foreign cars to adjust their prices.

The letters, Mr. Macdonald said, would "require them to maintain a relationship between their United States prices and their domestic High Court Allows Drug Store to Sue Detroit Edison Co.

Lawrence Cantor, Owner of the Selden Drugs Company, Charged Detroit Edison Violated Antitrust Laws by Illegally Tying in Light Bulb Sales to the Purchase of its Electricity.

WASHINGTON, July 6 (UPI)—The Supreme Court ruled today that state regulation of utilities does not completely shield power companies from private antitrust suits.

In a 6-3 decision, the court said a Detroit drug store owner could bring an antitrust suit against the Detroit Edison company for its system of providing free light bulbs to residential customers.

Lawrence Cantor, owner of the Selden Drugs Company, charged Detroit Edison violated antitrust laws by illegally tying in light bulb sales to the purchase of its electricity.

Mr. Cantor said Detroit Edison took advantage of its state-recognized monopoly to enter the private bulb market in unfair competition with retailers.

Lower Federal courts dismissed Mr. Cantor's suit on grounds the cost of bulb supplies were included in electric rates approved by the Michigan Public Service Commission.

The Supreme Court reversed, allowing Mr. Cantor to take his suit to trial. Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the majority, said Detroit Edison had been supplying light bulbs since 1886—long before it was regulated by the state—and essentially had volunteered the plan.

Justice Stevens said the P.S.C. approved it, but there was no evidence Detroit Edison would be required to supply light bulbs if it chose not to do so, and filed a new rate schedule for P.S.C. approval.

Point of Sale Cash Registers Are Becoming a Growth Industry

By GENE SMITH
 Any electronics field that has among its leaders the giant International Business Machines Corporation, the NCR Corporation and TRW Inc., has already reached the big-business level. So it is that the Point of Sale segment of the electronics industry now appears ready for true growth-industry status.

The J. C. Penney Company recently signed a contract with I.B.M. for up to 6,000 Point of Sale units valued at about $30 million. The chain also has contracts with NCR and with the Singer Company, although the latter no longer manufactures the product.

Back in May 1969, when POS was in its infancy, J. C. Penney placed a $10 million order with the General Electric Company for a number of its "Tradar" POS terminals to be used in selected West Coast stores. In December the units were withdrawn to avoid complications during the Christmas rush and in September 1970 the contract was terminated.

POS is the latest generation of electronic cash register and as such will replace the standard electric cash register which, in turn, has all but removed the old mechanical cash registers from stores. Each POS device records the individual transaction and prints a customer's receipt while automatically providing information division. It is also why TRW introduced late last month a new generation of POS equipment aimed at department stores.

J. Sidney Webb, executive vice president in charge of TRW Electronics.

"We went into the Singer deal to make money, not to get Singer's customers," J. Sidney Webb, executive vice president in charge of TRW Electronics, said in a recent interview here.

Last Dec. 28 Singer decided to dissolve its business machines division and took a $325 million write-off. This was traced in the main to its POS operations. Joseph B. Flavin, who took over as chairman and president on Dec. 1, 1975, told a news conference after the annual meeting at Boston on May 13 that he thought the POS business would still develop into a major industry but that would not include Singer.

"Great Potential" Mr. Webb agreed with Mr. Flavin's assessment. He said in his interview: "This is a field with great growth potential. We first looked into it five years ago, but we wanted a new generation of equipment. Like all electronic businesses, there has to be a shakeout period. We feel the time is now ripe."

The TRW executive noted that his company had "probably 10,000 POS terminals" operating, the bulk with the May Department Stores. By

Week's Steel Output Lowest Since April

The nation's steel production fell in the week ended July 3 to its lowest level since the week ended April 3, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported yesterday. The trade association placed weekly output at 2.66 million tons, with the production capability index at 87.7 percent.

This saw a decline of 1.9 percent from the June 26 week, when the nation's steel mills poured 2.72 million tons of raw steel and the index stood at 89.9 percent. Production for the week ended April 3 totaled 2.59 million tons and the index stood at 85.7 percent. In the interim, weekly production has posted 10 gains and only three declines.

Cumulative production rose by 3.3 percent to 67.02 million tons and a production capability utilization index of 84.5 percent. The industry's output through July 3, 1975, amounted

Weak Automobile Stocks Lead Market Downward

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN
 Weakness in automobile issues helped send the stock market lower yesterday in moderate trading.

The Dow Jones industrial average moved steadily downward during the afternoon to finish at 991.81 with a decline of 8.92 points. On Friday, staging a mild pre-holiday rally, it had climbed 5 points.

General Motors dropped 1 1/2 to 66 1/2, while Ford fell 1 1/2 to 55 1/2. Both issues reacted adversely to a report that the Federal Trade Commission is considering a wide investigation of the domestic auto industry which might ultimately produce some form of antitrust action. Chrysler eased 1/4 to 19 1/2.

Stocks of the Big Three auto producers sold off even as the companies reported stepped-up sales for late June amid a boom year.

In a sense, weakness in the auto stocks underscored a rotation of selling pressure that has appeared recently in the basic industry groups that, starting in late 1974, powered the sharp resurgence in stock prices.

Last week the chemical group was buffeted by selling. And yesterday only two of the 30 Dow industrials, which include many of the large companies making up "Smokestack America," showed higher prices. There were fractional gains in Proctor & Gamble and Texaco.

Natamos tumbled 3 points to 26 in response to a proposal by the Indonesian Government to increase its oil revenues. Natamos is prominent among foreign oil companies that operate in Indonesia under production-sharing agreements.

Meanwhile, the stocks of several companies with large interests in natural gas moved higher. Mesa Petroleum added 1/2 to 29 1/2, while Superior Oil rose 2 points to 18 1/2. Skelly Oil added 1/4 to 87 after climbing 3/4 points on Friday. Last week's runup in Skelly was touched off by conjecture that the Mission Corporation, controlled by interests of the late J. Paul Getty, might try to buy up Skelly's remaining shares. Mission already owns 72 percent of Skelly's stock.

General Foods declined 1/2 to 28 1/2 on a report that soaring prices for coffee—a major contributor to the company's revenues and profits—could result in reduced demand.

Glamour stocks moved lower, with losses of a point or more appearing in I.B.M., National Semiconductor, Xerox, Disney and Texas Instruments.

Analysts said that one bright spot in yesterday's rather drab market performance was provided by the utilities, which managed to post small gains. An upward move in the utility sector has in the past often foreshadowed gains in the industrial average.

One hit-and-sensitive stock—Federal National Mortgage—

Market Place Commission Discounts for Small Traders

By ROBERT METZ

Ever since "May Day" — May 1, 1975 — stockbrokers have been required under Securities and Exchange Commission rules to negotiate commission charges with individual customers.

But the small investor who expected large discounts like those long available to institutional investors has been disappointed. Brokerage firms generally raised rates after May 1 by 3 to 8 percent on trades involving less than $5,000.

Since the average stock trade involves less than $5,000, the typical brokerage house customer is now paying more to buy and sell securities than he was at the beginning of 1975.

Some customers, nevertheless, have been able to obtain discounts from their brokers. A customer who generates from $5,000 to $10,000 in annual commissions can obtain discounts up to 20 percent from former fixed rates.

Those who have obtained such discounts have had to fight for them in many instances, often having to threaten to switch their accounts to another firm.

The individual has still another means. He can go to a broker advertising discounts for all customers.

Two such brokers, Quick & Reilly Inc. and Kingsley, Boyle & Southwood Inc., members of the New York Stock Exchange, like their nonmember competitors, the member firm discounters offer trading services but no research service or investment advice.

Nonmember discount brokers include Source Securities Inc., Daley Coolidge & Company and Odd Lot Securities Inc.

The discounters have learned that small trades are unprofitable for them as well as for full-service brokers. Thus, minimum transaction charges are the rule and they range generally from $25 for Source Equities to $30 for Quick & Reilly.

Source Securities, which recently raised its minimum transaction charge from $20, also requires a minimum of $250 advance commission payment. After 90 days, the customer loses his right to a refund and must trade to recover what is left of the deposit.

On the other hand, Mr. Quital believes that the individual who has been successful in making his own investment decisions—whether he trades twice or 50 times a year—should consider a discount broker.

Generally speaking, discounts range from 25 to 50 percent, depending upon when the order is placed and the size of the trade. A customer who buys 100 shares of American Telephone and Telegraph stock would pay $80.73 under the old fixed rates, which are widely used by member firms today.

The discount on a 100-share trade in Telephones at the opening price of the day would range to $45.45 percent, or $45. Orders placed after the opening are discounted at up to 40 percent, for a cost of $48 in this case. An order to buy or sell at a specific price would be executed at discounts of up to 35 percent, for a cost, in this case, of $52.

Credit Markets Off in Dull Trading

By JOHN H. ALLAN
The credit markets advance that got started early last week continued early yesterday, and then it seemed to run out of steam for no apparent reason. Trading was inactive all day, and traders could cite no reason for either the market's early rise or its later setback. The interest rate on Federal funds dipped to 5 1/2 percent, or 55/16 percent, slightly below the 5 1/2 percent level at which it stayed so much of the time recently, and the decline in this key interest rate may have helped the general rise in prices throughout the credit markets. The decline in the funds rate, which is the interest rate that banks charge on loans or reserves, did not result from Federal Reserve action. The central bank's only activity in the money market yesterday was to sell some Treasury bills for announced late yesterday that it would sell $6 billion of bills at its weekly auction of three-month and six-month bills next Monday. The financing will result in a reduction of $109 million in the volume of bills outstanding. The total to be sold will include $2.5 billion of three-month bills and $3.5 billion of six-month bills. The Government National Mortgage Association announced that it planned to sell $202 million of mortgage-backed pass-through securities at a competitive bidding July 15. The sale will be the 17th by Ginnie Mae, and it will bring the total of mortgage-backed securities sold in this way to $4.3 billion.

In the Ginnie Mae sale, $125.7 million of 7 1/2 percent securities and $76.4 million of 7 1/4 percent securities will be offered. International or Government accounts that it serves. The sale, however, had little impact on the bill market and bill rates dropped as much as 10 basis points. In Washington, the Treasury

Lower Profit Attributed to Las Vegas Hotel Strike

By CLARE M. RECKERT
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Inc., a film producer that derived the major part of its income from hotel and casino operations, reported yesterday profit declines of 18.9 percent for the fiscal third quarter and 28.6 percent for the nine months ended last year. The lower third-quarter results were attributed to the Las Vegas hotel strike, which halted operations of the M-G-M Grand Hotel during March 1976. The company said the hotel had an operating loss of about $1.3 million in March in contrast with a $3.5 million operating income in that month last year.

Net income was $6 million, or 46 cents a share, on revenues of $62 million, off 1.8 percent from a year earlier. For the nine months, net income was $17.5 million, or $1.34 a share, down from $24.5 million, or $1.90 a share, for the prior year's period, which included nonrecurring gains of $3.8 million, or 30 cents a share, realized from a cash tender offer for debentures. Revenues were $196.5 million, up 3.3 percent from a year earlier.

M-G-M last week completed the $90 million public sale of its securities, the proceeds of which will be used with internally generated funds for the construction of a hotel in Reno, Nev., scheduled to open in the summer of 1978. Operating earnings from feature films in the third fiscal quarter were $3.4 million, up from $4.8 million, while total and gaming accounted for $6.8 million, down from $8.4 million. While revenues from television programs more than doubled, operating losses of $245,000 and $336,000, respectively, were reported.

Room occupancy at the Las Vegas hotel averaged 83 percent, against 59 percent, respectively for the nine-month periods of 1976 and 1975.

U.S. LETTERS DUE ON FOREIGN AUTOS

prices) in such a way that they will not be dumped. He added that "most of those who will receive letters have already complied." The letters will also tell foreign auto makers exactly how far off their prices are from acceptable levels. The companies then have the option of raising their United States prices or lowering their prices at home. Most are expected to raise their prices here. Treasury officials declined to name the companies in violation of antidumping regulations, although Volkswagen of America Inc. is generally believed to be among those on the list. A spokesman at VW's United States headquarters in Englewood Cliffs, N.J., said the company "has not received any communication from Treasury so we cannot comment on it. But the spokesman, Baron Bates, added, "As far as I know, we aren't dumping. What the Treasury Department says is the question." The Treasury Department did give a clean bill of health to the makers of the Toyota, Datsun, and Honda, Japanese cars. The British Royal Enfield and West Germany's Porsche were also cleared. Mr. Macdonald said "four or five" manufacturers who were considered guilty of dumping at the time of the Treasury investigation have involuntarily complied with antidumping laws.

DKG Widening Ownership Base

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

DKG Inc., which changed from a sales promotion firm to an ad agency in 1961 when it got the Talon zipper account, is in the midst of another change that signals maturity and growth. It is spreading the ownership around.

According to the American Association of Advertising Agencies, major agencies—those with more than $40 million a year in billings—rarely tightly controlled. And DKG, after three years of a fairly flat billings level, is expecting to rocket past that $40 million figure this year.

So the company is increasing its owners from five to eight, all of them members of the board and executive committee. Instead of Shepard Kurnit, chairman and chief executive, owning 53 percent, the shop has entered into a new era of sharing.

"I used to own 100 percent of nothing," he said, obviously pleased with the change.
New Lawrence Spector (the lawyer), president; Neil Calet and Peter Michael Hirsch, executive vice presidents and creative directors, have each increased their equity from 15 percent to 20 percent.

The new 5 percenters—all senior vice presidents—are Lester B. Goldstein, general operations manager, who used to own 2 percent; Eleon-or Holtzman, director of research and marketing information; Martin Lipsitz, another creative director, and Henry J. Wasiak Jr., who has a new title: manager of the account services department.

All were gathered around the big square conference-room table yesterday morning. All wore those pleased smiles that said, "I've got a piece of the DKG rock."

Mr. Kurnit opened the proceedings on a rather philosophical note with the observation that the agency had been relatively quiet publicity-wise during the last couple of years.

Most news about agencies is made up of controversy, chaos, account losses and management upheavals, he said, adding that DKG had had none of these, growing quietly instead with business from existing clients.

So Mr. Spector took the opportunity to announce some new business for the new year—a new product from Amstar, Metrafame, a pet products division of Mat-

Yardley's Fragrances
Moving to Marschalk

Yardley of London is switching its fragrances and cosmetics from Altman, Stoller, Weiss to Marschalk, which has already had its soap business. David R. Altman, chairman of the losing agency, said he had resigned the business because of disagreements on marketing. W. D.
Hunt, Yardley's president, said the move had been under serious consideration for months and that he was won over by Marschalk's
"superior performance."

Mr. Altman, whose agency had the account for a year and a half, said that he had staffed up for a promised $3 million a year in billings but that they stayed at about $1 million. Yardley says the account is a $2.5 million piece of business.

According to John D.

newed interest in sales."

The hope is that the lot-

Toyo Kogyo Sale
Of Rotary Engines
To Soviet Is Set

By JUNNOSUKE OFUSA

Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, July 6—The Soviet Union has purchased rotary engines in large quantities from Toyo Kogyo, Japan's third largest automaker, as part of its research effort to develop a mass-produced rotary engine of its own. Shipment is due to begin this week.

In addition, Soviet authorities have proposed buying a complete plant to turn out rotary engines, according to a spokesman for Toyo Kogyo, best known to Americans as the maker of Mazda passenger cars.

Analysts here believe that the Russians are in an advanced stage of research of a practical rotary engine. Last December, Moscow dispatched five engineers to Toyo Kogyo's factory in Hiroshima to inspect its production facilities.

Japanese experts point out that the Soviet Union has no market to speak of domestically to justify mass production of rotary engine passenger cars.
Rather, these experts believe the ultimate objective of the Soviet research is military application of the rotary engine.

The Soviet research is apparently designed not so much for passenger cars that use gasoline, as for tanks and military trucks using heavy oil as fuel.

Rotary engines offer many advantages over standard reciprocating engines. Smaller, lighter, with greater horse power and less vibration, they are most easily mass-produced with a smaller number of parts.

The 50,000 rotary engine parts, which the Soviet Union has purchased for shipment to Moscow on July 10, are mostly the pivotal part of the engine controlling its revolutions and airtightness. Toyo Kogyo said that these parts are large enough in numbers to produce 400 to 500 test vehicles.

The patent rotary engine is held by two West German companies N.S.U. and Wankel, from which Toyo Kogyo imported technology to make rotary engines in 1961. On the basis of the basic patent, the Japanese automaker has succeeded in the development and manufacture of a rotary engine of its own at a cost of $57 million.

Today, Toyo Kogyo has all the patents required for the commercial production of rotary engines. In addition to the basic patent, the Japanese automaker's peripheral patents and related technological know-how would be required for the mass production of the rotary engine.

The Soviet Machinery Export and Import Corporation has reportedly denied that that country is contemplating the use of the rotary engine for military purposes.

New Denizens of the Deep.

Underneath the sea lies a virgin territory filled with exotic forms of nature and wrapped in a profound quiet. It's a mystical world where the loudest sound is that of a diver's own breathing.
Weightless and graceful as a fish, the diver experiences an otherworldly adventure; a kind of kaleidoscopic space odyssey that some call a magical underwater high.
In its cover story this week, Newsweek tells about the denizens of the deep: the million Americans who dive for pleasure, profit or pure adventure.
With a thrust of flippers and the hiss of compressed air, divers today are exploring underwater caves, drilling for oil, mining for gold, searching for sunken treasure, photographing fossils, farming fish, and testing man's ability to live for days underneath the sea.
But, as Newsweek reports, that's not all they're doing. You'll learn about the young couple in Orlando, Florida, who last month gurgled their wedding vows to each other at the bottom of a 150,000-gallon tank while an 85-pound turtle nibbled on the bride's plastic wedding gown.
From life underwater to Bicentennial celebrations to the ordeal of hijack hostages, this week's Newsweek brings 19 million readers the intense editorial package that, over the past eight years, has attracted more advertising pages than any other newsweekly.

Sindona Loses in Court In Banco di Roma Case

Michele Sindona, the Italian financier whose holdings at one time included a substantial interest in the defunct Franklin National Bank, yesterday lost a civil court battle in Roma involving Banco di Roma.

Mr. Sindona, who left Italy in 1974 and has not returned, had been attempting to have the Banco di Roma honor an alleged verbal agreement wherein the bank had agreed, he said, to cover 185 billion lire in debts, originally worth about $254 million.

The court held it was inconceivable that there would be no written record of an agreement involving such large amounts.

Mr. Sindona had claimed the bank had assured him it would cover his debts in return for a lien on his controlling interest in Societa Generale Immobiliare, a large real estate holding company.

The Secretary General of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said at a news conference in Vienna yesterday that "it would be a mistake to believe that the oil price has been frozen until the end of this year."

"Meschach G. Feyide added that "unless the developed countries succeed in curbing inflation and radically improve the economic situation, there will be a need for adjustment in the price of crude oil."

At its meeting in Indonesia in May, the 13-member OPEC group decided to continue a freeze on prices agreed to last September when basic prices were raised by 10 percent effective Oct. 1.

Noting that the subject of oil prices was under study all the time, the OPEC official said: "If action on new oil prices should be necessary between now and our next meeting—scheduled for Dec. 15—such action would be taken."

Angus Ogilvy, 47, a director until 1973 of Lonrho Ltd., the London-based conglomerate, yesterday said he was resigning his remaining corporate directorships. The British businessman, whose wife is Princess Alexandra, a cousin of Queen Elizabeth, made his announcement following publication of a Government report on Lonrho's affairs prior to 1973.

The 640-page Government report, which concerned allegations that Lonrho was using the Cayman Islands as a tax haven to pay executives, held that Mr. Ogilvy was negligent in fulfilling his duties as a Lonrho director to an extent that merited severe criticism.

Mr. Ogilvy termed the criticism unfair and based on errors but maintained that it placed him in an impossible position on other boards. He had been serving as a director of the Midland Bank, Rank Organisation, Robeco, Guardian Royal Exchange Assurance and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

A relatively stable price outlook for silver was forecast yesterday by Robert Guy, a director of N. M. Rothschild & Sons, London-based merchant bankers. He told a commodity conference in London that silver should stay in a price range of $4.80 to $5.20 per ounce over the next three months.

He said he based his forecast on the assumption that the market would remain orderly and that silver mines would increase sales with industrial users accepting the current price levels.

As for gold, Mr. Guy observed that although long-term investors may not be buying aggressively at the moment, their resolve to hold gold has not appreciably weakened.

Norman Auerbach, 56, associate managing partner of Coopers & Lybrand, will become managing director of the accounting firm on Oct. 1. He will succeed Philip DeFless, 61, who is formally retiring as managing director next year. A certified public accountant, as well as a lawyer and the holder of M.B.A. degree, Mr. Auerbach joined Coopers & Lybrand in 1947.

William E. Winter, 55, president and chief operating officer of the Seveup Company since 1974, has been named chief executive. He succeeds Ben H. Wells, 70, who will continue as chairman of the company.

F.D.A. Approval Sought For Permalens Contacts

Cooper Laboratories, Parsippany, N.J., announced yesterday that it had filed an investigational new drug application with the Food and Drug Administration for its Permalens soft contact lenses. The application is the first step in seeking F.D.A. approval for marketing new drugs or devices.

The company said that its lenses were intended for 24-hour-a-day wear for a period of several months. It added that they had been used for five years and sold to a limited extent in Britain, where they were originally developed. Full commercial introduction in Britain is scheduled in the fall. Introduction in the Canadian and Australian markets is planned by the end of the year.

Consumer tests of the lenses in this country are expected to start later this summer. The company noted that while the search for F.D.A. approval could not be predicted, it had taken at least two years to obtain approval for most soft contact lenses.

Boise Cascade Sells All Its Chilean Notes

The Boise Cascade Corporation announced the sale of all its Chilean Government notes for $28.5 million in cash. The notes, with a face value of about $61 million, were acquired following the nationalization in 1970 of a Chilean electric power company in which Boise Cascade held, through a subsidiary, an interest of nearly 75 percent.

The nationalization was effected under the administration of President Eduardo Frei, which preceded the Marxist Allende administration.

The company said that its previously established reserve for Latin American investments would absorb the difference in the sales price and face value and that earnings would not be affected. The reserve totaled $76.5 million at the end of 1975.

The company has been reducing its investments in Latin America since 1972 and with sale of the Chilean notes has cut the total from $290 million to $100 million.

$10 Million Contract To Cubic Corp. Unit

The Cubic Corporation, Los Angeles, announced that its San Diego-based Cubic West-Data subsidiary had been awarded a $10 million contract by the Hong Kong Transit Railway Corporation for automatic fare-collection equipment. This will include passenger gates, ticket readers, change-making machines and other fixtures totaling 1,000 items. Deliveries are scheduled in 1978.

Hong Kong Transit currently is building the first stage of the British Crown Colony's long-planned first subway and surface system—9.6 miles of track and 15 stations. The initial stage, scheduled to open in 1979, represents one-third of the entire system, expected to be fully operational in 1980.

Alcoa Refinery Closed

The Aluminum Company of America, Pittsburgh, reported that its Alcoa Minerals of Jamaica alumina refinery at Clarendon, Jamaica, has been closed down because of serious water damage to one of the plant's two digestion units. The company said that first reports indicated that the damage had resulted from a rupturing of a pressure vessel. It added that at present it had no estimate of the damage or probable length of the shutdown.

Norton Simon Takes Over Orlean S.A. of France

Norton Simon Inc. purchased control yesterday of Orlean S.A., a French cosmetics company operating in 133 countries, from Transaction Inc. The cash transaction involved $15 million, according to trade sources, which estimated Orlean's annual sales at $40 million.

Norton Simon's consumer brands include Hunt tomato products, Wesson Oil, Max Factor cosmetics, Canada Dry soft drinks, Johnnie Walker Scotch, other beverages and McColl patterns.

Hachette Plans to Sell France-Soir to New Group

Hachette S.A., France's largest publishing concern, announced in Paris yesterday that it planned to sell France-Soir, the country's second largest newspaper, to a newly formed publishing group for $10.5 million.

The group, called Presse-Alone, is headed by Le Parisien Libere, the chairman of another publishing group that produces comic books, among other things.

Fraser Companies Arranges Financing

Fraser Companies, Edmondston, New Brunswick, announced that it had arranged a $43.25 million financing. It involves the private placement of $35 million Series B debentures due in 1992 and an exchange of $8.25 million Series A debentures due in 1987 for a similar amount of 5 1/2 percent outstanding first mortgage and collateral trust bonds due 1976-87 at $750,000 a year.

Fraser pulp, paperboard and lumber products produced in 65 percent owned by Noranda Mines, Toronto. Earlier this year, Fraser announced a three-year, $91.5 million modernization and expansion program for its Edmondston pulp mill.

S.E.C. Charges Bank

The United Americas Bank of 50 Broadway has been charged by the Securities and Exchange Commission with violating Federal securities laws. The commercial bank, which has branches at 100 William Street and at 54th Street and Broadway, allegedly extended credit secured by stocks in excess of the maximum loan values permitted by the Federal Reserve System. The S.E.C. said the action grew out of an investigation in 1973 and 1974 of the bank's predecessor, the Underwriters Bank and Trust Company.

U.S. Sale to Iran

The Defense Department has given notice that it proposes to sell $30 million of helicopter maintenance tools, repair parts and related items to Iran. The notification was sent to Congress, which has until July 26 to veto the deal if it wishes.

E. C. Ernst Inc., Washington, D.C., construction contractor, announced the filing of a proposed public offering of 400,000 shares of common stock with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Drexel Burnham & Company has been named manager of the underwriting group.

Reserve Oil Financing

The Reserve Oil and Gas Company, Los Angeles, announced completion of a previously announced $60 million, 15-year financing arrangement with a group of five insurance companies. The company said that about $40 million of the loan was used for the repayment of interim bank loans used for the acquisition of the Basin Petroleum Corporation in January. The balance is being used for working capital and to retire other debts.

Settlement Backed At Canadian Javelin

A Federal judge approved as "fair and reasonable" yesterday the payment by Canadian Javelin Ltd. of Montreal of $1.3 million to settle an investors' lawsuit alleging securities violations. Judge Morris Lasker said the stockholders in the mining and natural resources development company were misled between April 30, 1969 and Oct. 24, 1973 would get shares in the settlement fund.

Pre-Restructuring

The Prel Corporation, River Edge, N.J., builder-developer that filed for reorganization last July under Chapter XI of the Bankruptcy Act, announced an agreement with two banks to restructure $20.5 million of existing loans and obtain $6.1 million in additional financing. The company also said it planned to spin off to its shareholders Prel's 75 percent interest in Mach Industries of Hightstown, N.J.

Financial Coups Abound at the Regency

Webber, Jackson & Curtis, before making his daily trek to lower Broadway.

Wall Street, of course, is more a state of mind than a place, particularly since many of its bankers, brokers and lawyers have moved to Park and Third Avenues in the Fifties and Sixties.

Mr. Rohatyn goes to work at Lazard Freres & Company in Rockefeller Center.

Moreover, the Regency regulars seem to come from a concentrated slice of Wall Street, namely its deal-makers. They are the investment bankers and independent financiers who put companies together or take them apart, garnering for themselves whopping fees and a chance at huge profits through the sale of stock that will be taxable, preferably, as a capital gain.

Deal-Makers Prevail

Some of them specialize in tender offers or takeovers of a company by asking stockholders to surrender their shares at a price higher than that prevailing in the market. There has been a flurry of such tender offers—many of them angrily cooed—recently when the stock of many corporations has been severely depressed by the recession. The takeovers have been variously described as bargain-hunters, raiders, vultures and saviors of capitalism.

Before he emerged as one of New York City's fiscal rescuers, Mr. Rohatyn's reputation was built on deal-making and his knack for arranging complicated corporate mergers. Now he seems to be deal-making activities, often at the same time and the same place.

For instance, it was over breakfast at the Regency that Mr. Rohatyn and David Margolis, a Contron Board member who is president of Colk Industries, discussed the takeover by Colk of Garlock Inc. The match was consummated last January for $87.4 million in cash after jousting and recriminations in the courts and the financial press.

Lawyers at Breakfast

Both sides were represented by Regency breakfast regulars, two lawyers who have become the Clarence Darrow and the William Jennings Bryan of the tender wars. Colk's lawyer was Joseph Flom of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, and Margolis' lawyer was Martin Lipton of Wachtel, Lipton, Rosen & Katz.

Mr. Lipton was seen the other morning breakfasting with John R. Jakobson, a partner in Lasker, Stone &

Stern & Company, a firm of New York Stock Exchange specialists, and chatting with public relations man who helped Mr. Flom foil a takeover of the Sterndent Corporation. The Flom-Kerst strategy was to cry "Arab boycott." They intended that Jewish deontists would prevent buying dental equipment from Sterndent because one of the investors in the would-be takeover group was the Kuwait Investment Company.

Mr. Kerst was having breakfast with another of his clients, Preston Robert Tisch, president of the Loews Corporation, which owns the Regency as well as the CNA Financial Corporation, which it won in a tender offer but only after a legal battle of legendary nastiness.

The gregarious Mr. Tisch usually goes around the room shaking hands with the regulars before sitting down to his breakfast of cottage cheese and Ry-Krisp. His sole older brother, Lester Pollock, Loews' executive vice president, usually sits quietly and plan.

Since the CNA acquisition, Loews has had a $2 billion portfolio of stocks and bonds, which make the Tischs who control Loews major Wall Street customers. This is one reason, a regular suggested, that the deal-makers have been homing at the Regency.

Another peculiarity is the frequency of complaints about the prices—$2 for fresh orange juice, 95 cents for coffee, $1.45 for dry cereal.

Mr. Tisch observed, "During that one hour of breakfast those guys eat of $800,000 worth of food. They still complain about spending so much for breakfast."

BANGOR PLANNING LONE STAR STAKE

Diversified Concern Weighs Buying a 10% Interest

By HERBERT KOSETZ

The Bangor Punta Corporation, a diversified company based in Greenwich, Conn., announced yesterday that it was considering buying a 10 percent interest in Lone Star Industries, the nation's largest cement manufacturer and a distributor of building materials.

Bangor Punta is proposing to buy an investment of 1.1 million shares of Lone Star belonging to James F. Stewart, Lone Star's chairman and vice-chairman of Bangor Punta.

Under the terms of the proposal, 550,000 shares of Lone Star common would be acquired immediately at $17.025 a share for a total of about $9.38 million. The price for the remaining 550,000 shares to be purchased over the next nine years would be based on future market prices.

David W. Wallace, Bangor Punta chairman, emphasized that no formal agreement had been reached and said that any agreement with Mr. Stewart would be subject to approval of the Bangor Punta board and to the receipt of two separate opinions from independent banking concerns that the acquisition was fair to Bangor Punta shareholders.

Bangor Punta, whose products include pleasure boats, hand-guns and cottonseed oil, has extensive farming operations and is a 52 percent owner of Piper Aircraft. Its 1975 sales, including Piper, totaled $256 million.

The Supreme Court is reviewing a $36 million judgment against Bangor Punta and others resulting from a lawsuit that stemmed from Bangor Punta's 1969 acquisition of Piper Aircraft shares.

Lone Star Industries, also based in Greenwich, reported sales of $625.4 million in 1975.

COMING THIS SEPTEMBER, THE BIGGEST MAGAZINE FOR MEN EVER PUBLISHED.

SEPTEMBER PREVIEW

Actually, we're nine of America's leading inflight magazines, but think of us as one. Unduplicated editorial content is one reason (we're planning more than 350 pages in September). Other national magazines market regional editions. They change advertising, not content. Our unique network concept is different. We change content, not advertising. Under nine separate covers, your message delivers nine times the punch!

*Naturally, space in each of our nine inflights or Holiday Inn Companion may be ordered separately as well.

FOR MEN.

Some media people have trouble putting us in a category. We're geared to an executive audience, but we're not all business. We enjoy the games people play as much as anyone, but you'd hardly call us a flying version of Sports Illustrated. We're very entertaining, but we haven't used a fold-out yet. The fact is: we're different by design. We're not a background publication. Our essential concern is with information as it applies to the personal and business experiences of our readers. By industry definition, that makes us a service magazine, in fact, the only full service magazine for men (the equivalent for women might be The Ladies' Home Journal or McCall's). This analysis of our total editorial content for 1975 shows why:

- Business & Finance 25%
- Sports 12
- Fashion & Interiors 7
- Health & Beauty 14
- Travel & Leisure 16
- Human Behavior 5

Actually, the overwhelming emphasis on service in our editorial content (79%) isn't so surprising when you consider the composition of our Editorial Board.

- Business & Finance Eliot Janeway
- Sports Dick Schaap
- Fashion & Interiors Robert L. Green
- Health & Beauty Polly Bergen
- Travel & Leisure Francis Koltun
- Human Behavior Dr. Theodore Isaac Rubin

Think about it. In the magazine business today, men's service is a category of one. We're the one.

"STYLE IN LIVING"—a special issue devoted to all aspects of style (environmental, business), guest-edited by Robert L. Green, former Director of Playboy. In Mainliner (published by East/West for the flight of United Airlines).

"WHERE TO FIND MANAGEMENT TALENT"—a new look at the industry. In Sky (Delta).

"YOU CAN'T COMPARE APPLES TO ORANGES"—a Cali survival kit for New York. In The California Magazine (PSA).

"HOT DAM GUIDE TO LAS VEGAS"—quick-takes of Vegas experience with Hoover Dam thrown in if you're early. In Sundancer (Hughes Airwest).

"GLORY FROM THE ASHES"—an emotion charge essay on Guatemala six months after the quake. In Pan Am.

"FALL FASHION PREVIEW"—a special supplement edited by Chip Tolbert, Fashion Director, Men's Assn. In Flighttime (Allegheny, Continental, Ozar).

"SELECTED WORKS FROM AMERICA'S MOST BLE PUBLICATIONS"—our special format: the best of the nation's magazines, books and news. In Review (Eastern).

A CHALLENGE TO DEBATE THE ISSUES.

There's still time to reserve advertising space for 1976 (in fact, there's still time to make our September issue). Even if your budget is already allocated, you may wish to reconsider. Check the facts. Check the figures. We think our story makes an overwhelming case for immediate action. That's why we're making this challenge now:

We'll go anywhere in New York. We'll meet any responsible representative of Esquire Magazine in open debate. You name the place. Our office. Their office. Your office. Your apartment. Your car or any suitable street corner in town. Even pick a day for lunch. We'll grab the tab (their's too, of course). We think you'll see why, once you've examined the issues—side by side.

(212) 838-2826
(If you don't call us, we'll call you)

THE MAGAZINE BUSINESS IS LIKE POLITICS—YOU'VE GOTTA WIN THE PRIMARIES.

Liquor. Tobacco. Automobiles. Fashion. There are primary buy lists for almost every men's product and product-category you can name. We belong on those lists. Naturally, we don't expect other magazines to move over and make room. We know we're in for a fight. We also know we're going to win. After all, when you run a campaign on the kind of issues we've got, how can you lose?
